ROMANCE OF A FAMILY.

Traveling Over the World in Search of a Kidnaped Daughter.

A family of gypsies have been camping in Nelson near the border of Albemarle county, Virginia, whose story contains as much pathos and romance as any to be found in the stories of fiction or history.

Although this family to all appearances was composed of gypsies, with all the roving habits of that remarkable race, yet the most casual observer, by a glance at the countenance of any of its members, could easily perceive that only Anglo-Saxon blood coursed through his or her veins. A number of years ago this family lived in a happy home in Scotland. They were endowed with every thing to make life precious—competence, love, and an enviable standing among their neighbors. The one daughter of the house was sent to a distant city to receive the advantages of education not afforded by the rural district of her parental home. At the age of sixteen she returned to her childhood's home a beautiful, accomplished maiden, the darling of her parents, and the favorite and pride of the entire neighborhood. One morning, but a few days after her arrival, she took her bonnet and left the house, telling her mother that she was going to see a friend who lived at a short distance. The grief and affliction of her loving parents may be imagined when it is learned that she was never heard of again. The country for miles around was thoroughly searched by sympathizing friends, but without avail. After a long and unfruitful search the mother conceived the idea that her daughter had been kidnaped by a party of gypsies, who were in the vicinity at the time of her disappearance and departed immediately afterward.

Since that time the distracted mother, accompanied by her scarcely less grieving husband, has been traveling from place to place visiting the camps of gypsies, ever fondly clinging to the hope that she will at last find her long-lost child.

REAL TRAGEDY ON THE STAGE.

A Performance at a Paris Theatre Interrupted by Death.

The performance of "L'Oiseau Bleu" at the Theater des Gobelins, in Paris, was interrupted the other night, by a sudden cessation in the dialogue, and the leading lady was seen to look intently into the prompter's box before the footlights. It happened that this was in the most interesting point of the third act, and naturally all eyes followed those of the leading lady. The audience, of course, could not see the cause of the interruption, but the artists on the stage noticed that the prompter had fallen asleep, and by an unfortunate coincidence the actress had forgotten her lines at the same moment. After waiting half a minute and the man giving no evidence of returning to consciousness, one of the actors stepped forward and gently shook him. There was no response, and looking closer, those upon the stage saw that the prompter was dead. Without dropping the curtain the people on the stage remained in their various positions that the incident found them. The manager stepped to the front and made his explanation, the body was dragged down under the stage and a new prompter climbed into his place, and the play proceeded.

OUR ILLEGAL MOTTO.

"E Pluribus Unum" Was Never Authorized to Appear on Coins.

It is a somewhat singular fact that the legend "E Pluribus Unum," which has appeared on different coins of the United States for more than a hundred years, was never authorized by law, made legal by act of congress or any other body of that power vested within itself.

Its first appearance on a coin was in 1786, before the establishment of a United States mint. At that time there was a private coining establishment at Newburg, N. Y., and the well-known motto was first inscribed upon a coin struck at that "mint." It was a copper coin of the value of about one penny, or something near two cents. They are now very valuable, and but few coin collectors can boast of possessing such rarities.

In 1787 a goldsmith by the name of Brasher coined a $16 gold piece, which is now one of the rarest of coins, there being but four specimens of it known, all of which are held at $3,000 each. This rare piece has the well-known motto stamped upon it in this mixed form: "Unum E Pluribus."

Sisal Grass of Yucatan.

The sisal grass of Yucatan is one of the most remarkable vegetable products known. It grows in long blades, sometimes to the length of four or five feet, and when dry the blade curls up from side to side, making a cord which is stronger than any cotton string of equal size that has ever been manufactured.

Wisdom for Babies.

A Philadelphia publisher contemplates bringing out an edition of Shakespeare in words of one syllable for use in the primary schools. This looks absurd at first glance, and yet much of Shakespeare's virility is due to small words well chosen, and many of his finest phrases contain no words of more than two syllables.

A Man of Force.

Dentist—And I can give you gas for $1 and save all pain. "Pshaw! I ain't afraid. (To his wife.) Sit right down, Matilda, and have her yanked."

A one-armed man was asked by a woman how he came to lose his arm. He promised to tell her if she would not ask another question. She agreed, and he said it was bitten off. As she went away she said she wished she knew what bit it off.

GENUINE BARGAINS!

Has the actual difference in the way CLOTHING is put up ever occurred to you? If it has not, a visit to the various places where clothing is sold will convince you that there is a vast difference between "slop-shop hand-me-downs" and clothing (not things) made of good material and nicely put together. Here is where we have always made a strong point and the fact that we are selling Men's and Boys' Suits and Pants, trimmed, lined and sewed equal to any tailor made suits, at prices as low, and often lower, than the "slop shop" stuff explains in itself why we are doing so large a clothing business. We have put forth an extra effort this spring, and you will find our tables loaded down with the prettiest line of MEN'S, BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S SUITS to be found on this market, and if you are looking for good, honest goods at the lowest prices, we ask you to carefully inspect this department. And in Hats, Shirts, Suspenders, Overalls, Jeans, Pants, Socks, Ties, Night Shirts, etc., we have just what you want and at a price that will meet your views.
