Said McKeighan in his acceptance speech at Holdrege: "I mean no disrespect to the defenseless dead when I tell you that I am no democrat."

THE reaction in favor of opening the world's fair on Sunday is a hopeful sign. It would make it possible for many thousands to see the big show who would otherwise be debarred.

THE supreme court of Iowa has affirmed the decision of the court below in the celebrated meteor case. The decision is that when a meteor falls from heaven on a man's farm or into his door yard it is a gift from heaven to the owner of the land, and no passer by has a right to dig it up, cart it off and sell it for a thousand dollars to a bloody scientist.

PROF. ANDREWS is winning golden opinion wherever he goes. Wherever he goes crowds gather to hear him. More they hear and know him the more the people believe they should send him to Washington to represent them. When they seat Prof. Andrews in the congressional chair western Nebraska can for once expect to have a representative there that will represent them in such a way that they will be proud.—Holdrege Citizen.

THE interviews with Secretary of State John C. Allen published by this paper in relation to the affairs of the insane asylum as conducted at present have met with the hearty commendation of the business men of the city. Many merchants who have had dealings with the asylum management are satisfied that the present method of purchasing supplies is essentially vicious and productive of loss to the state. They earnestly desire to see the adoption of a system that will make the manipulation of figures by sharp bidders an impossibility.—Journal.

THE Des Moines Leader, angered and irritated by the many Harrison commercial traveling men's clubs, made a bitter attack upon the "commercial traveler" in a recent issue, calling them "hobos," "bums," "paid pimps," "blow hards" and other sweet names. The fact is, there is not a band of more sensible, decent and more intelligent men in the country than these commercial travelers. In this respect they have made a wonderful improvement in the past few years. And they are working and voting for Harrison because they are dealing every day with facts and prices, and represent truly the great business interests of this country which are opposed to the disastrous financial and tariff policies of the democratic platform.—Bee.

REPORTS from various parts of Nebraska show that the farmers of this state are giving more attention than ever before to winter wheat. It has been clearly demonstrated by recent experience that this state can produce as much wheat to the acre as other states in which this cereal is the sole dependence of the farmer. Although corn is acknowledged to be the king in this state, it is gratifying to note that wheat, the greatest staple the world over, can be produced in Nebraska as easily as elsewhere. A prominent citizen of this state, who has given a great deal of attention to this subject, says that there is no reason why Nebraska should not raise 100,000,000 bushels of wheat yearly instead of the present product of 18,000,000 bushels. Reports published from time to time in this paper show that the wheat product ranges from twenty-five to forty bushels to the acre. In this state as in others, the principle of crop rotation will sooner or later be adopted. Dr. Miller says that the crop that is paying off mortgages in this state today is wheat, and that there is a vast amount of land in Nebraska that is particularly adapted to this cereal. It is gratifying to note that the World's fair commissioners of this state are preparing to make a great wheat exhibit. Samples of wheat will be shown from fields yielding forty bushels to the acre, and the quality of the grain will be the best. "The state of Nebraska," says Dr. Miller, "is a garden spot, and there is no reason why it should not be one of the richest states in the union." Intelligent farming is needed, and in a few years it will be seen that the state of Nebraska is by no means dependent upon her great corn production. The teachings of experience will be heeded and the capabilities of the state will be developed from year to year in accordance with the development of diversified agriculture. "There never was another spot on earth," says Dr. Miller, "where God smiled so generously with sun and rain as he does here, and a man on one of these farms, if he has any energy at all, will continue to grow rich in spite of himself.—Bee.

THE death of Joseph Ernest Renan, which is announced today, was brought about, as in the case of so many distinguished men, especially scholars, by the contraction of a cold developing into congestion of the lungs. Mr. Renan was born in 1823, and so lacked but little of having attained his three score and ten years, but his intellectual vigor had not abated and he was in the full tide of literary production, working on his great "History of Israel Before the Birth of Christ," of which two volumes have been published. Renan was born of a devout family and was intended for the priesthood; in fact, he had begun his preparation for it, when he developed beliefs, or perhaps a lack of belief, which led to his abandonment of the seminary of St. Sulpice as a theological student. Instead of becoming a minister of the Christian religion he became one of the most powerful opponents along a certain line. It is doubtful if any other writer in the ranks of unbelief ever possessed more of the peculiar learning which is usually arrayed on the side of faith than Renan possessed. He was a great Semitic scholar and he made himself familiar by personal visitation with all the country so often spoken of as the "Land of the Bible." His best known book in this country, the "Life of Jesus," exhibits all the charms of his wonderful clear and fascinating style. The objection to other writers, that they dealt with their subject in a coarse and, to the devout, in a blasphemous manner, did not in the least apply to M. Renan, whose chapters were full of tenderness and reverence. His private life was most happy, and to believer and to unbeliever he was a most interesting personage.—Exchange.

STAND up for Nebraska. The gentlemen can do this by voting the republican ticket in November, and the ladies can do it by calling for Kearney cotton in the dry goods stores and accepting no other brand. We are all for Nebraska this year and every other year.

SOME idea of the advantages of advertising may be had from the fact that the train loaded with Nebraska products, which is now on its way east, is attracting the attention of thousands of people in every town where it stops. It appears that in the little village of Onedia in Illinois over 400 people have immigrated to Nebraska during the past year in consequence of having seen the exhibits of our advertising train last fall. In another small Illinois town 879 excursion tickets to Nebraska were sold during the past year as a direct result of this form of advertising. The plan of running this year's advertising train over the same route taken last year is certainly a wise one, for it will confirm and emphasize the favorable impressions already made upon the minds of many who contemplate seeking new homes. They will see an exhibit much larger and more diversified than that of last year, and will be impressed with the fact that the resources of this state are only just beginning to be developed. Large results may be confidently expected from this advertising exhibit.—Bee.

AN unidentified exchange brings to this office the following on the subject of "McKeighan, the state slanderer."

In the Republican valley, McKeighan's district, homeseekers are coming in by the hundreds, into every county and buying up the farm land at $10 to $15 per acre. They are coming from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, against the advertisements of McKeighan, that his farmer constituency were on their way to the poor house. Looking over his record as an agitator for the past twelve years can he now point to any word or utterance of his that has induced any homeseeker to come to this state? Will he now have the audacity to claim any part of the splendid progress of his district? Has he ever been instrumental in advancing the value of any poor man's home? Let the Republican valley stand up for Nebraska and repudiate McKeighan.

THE veterans carried away from Washington the most enthusiastic impressions of the Harrison administration. First, the president's touching sentiments in his letter of acceptance; next his sad letter of regret; then the tenderness and the noble welcome of the vice-president all to the co-ordinate branches of the government; then the opening of the White House without regard to hours, the cordial welcome of the president's commissioners of the district, and their care for so many thousands in the school-houses; and, lastly, the splendid decorations of the great executive buildings—all these impressed the truth on the minds and hearts of the veterans that this, in a peculiar sense, is a soldier's administration. And, doubtless, to every one of them came the reflection that the democrats have nothing—absolutely nothing—with which to parallel this inestimable element of Republican strength.

SECRETARY of State John C. Allen, or "Johnny Allen," as he is called by all classes, is making a quiet, but none the less effective campaign for republicanism this year. His personal friends are numbered by the thousand. They are scattered all over the state, and never lose an opportunity to say a good word about the geniality, the honesty and the conscientiousness of the secretary. He has made so many firm friends by his courtesy and his able and just management of the office that his part of the campaign goes marching on whether he is in his office hard at work or out among the people kissing the babies.—Journal.

JERRY SIMPSON, the sockless, is not to be outdone by the collectors of the sick Cleveland fund, and he is starting a fund of his own for the benefit of "the starving farmers of Kansas." Jerry is a starving farmer himself, and if the fund grows according to his hopes he will buy a pair of yarn stockings, so that his poverty will no longer be apparent to his shoemaker and washerwoman.—Journal.

GENERAL DANIEL SICKLES of New York, a democrat who cannot support Cleveland, says that in 1888 he stumped his state in behalf of Mr. Cleveland and found the soldiers almost unanimously opposed to him. He believes that the old veterans have not changed their minds and that they will keep the pension record of the democratic candidate in mind when they go to the polls. Mr. Cleveland has shown that he looks upon the union veterans with contempt and regards the pension system as a mere system of almsgiving. His pension voters are full of contemptuous and sarcastic allusions to the defenders of the country who were fighting for the flag while he was paying a substitute.—Bee.

MRS. LEASE says: "The spirit of lawlessness evoked and fostered by the organized democracy of the towns and cities of the south has become so intolerant that it demands the attention of law-abiding, God-fearing people everywhere. Free speech and a fair count of the ballot are arrogantly and openly denied. Within the past few days the southern chivalry of Georgia in the democratic clubs of Waycross, Albany and Macon resorted to mob violence, and incited and encouraged by the democratic press of the state indulged in hoodlumism and vile language and conduct that would put to shame the natives of an uncivilized community."

ONE fact is enough for me. The gates of Cattle Garden swing inward. They do not swing outward to any American laborer seeking a better country than this. These men who have toiled at wages in other lands that barely sustained life, and opened no avenue of promise to them or their children, know the good land of hope as well as the swallow knows the land of summer.—Benjamin Harrison.

THE Chicago Tribune has been making a study of political situation in the south, and comes to the conclusion that the people of Georgia voted as they threw the
