A BLACKSMITH SAVES THE LIFE OF A LITTLE GIRL .- Minnie Carney, of Lytle City, Iowa, was perhaps as near leaving this world as any one can be, and recover. She was sick with cholera uring news the past year than any other morbus; completely exhausted and unconscious. The physicians in consultation decided the case was hopeless and beyond their control.-Chas. J. Newcomb, a blacksmith, walked four miles through the darkness and storm, to get it is the paper for Nebraskans. It has a remedy he had himself used and which he firmly believed would cure her. That medicine was Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He obtained part of a bottle with which he hastily returned and gave the little sufferer a half teaspoonful, which relieved her and consciousneess gradually returned. The medicine was given in broken doses and in a short time she was well. He is positive that it saved her life, and has others in that vicinity. For sale by McConnell & Co.

The Call Leads the Procession.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of The Call in another column. Since its reduction in price The Call is the cheapest daily in Nebraska, and its spicy and independent policy is too well known to need comment from us. In reducing the price of The Call so as to put it within the reach of everybody, the management have placed themselves a decided step in advance of all other publishers in the state. This is an era of popular prices for the newspaper, and The Call is, as usual, at the head of the procession.

FRENCH DEPUTIES.

THEIR PALACE, CEREMONIES AND IDIOSYNCRASIES.

A History of the Chamber and the Building In Which It Meets-Scenes In and Around the Palace When the Chamber Is In Session—Two Salaries.

To Americans, who know that after the excitement of the presidential election is over there will be no change of importance for four years, these continnal ministerial modifications of the months in advance, which is only 10 French cabinet appear strange, and their cents more than the regular price of the effect is prejudicial to France both as paper alone. This gives every subscriber regards her domestic prosperity and her international prestige. Under the dia $500 accident policy, or less, according rectory there were two legislative bodies to occupation, free. If you want a daily the "Five Hundred" and the "Ancients." paper, THE JOURNAL is the one you After holding their sessions in various should read, as its state editions contain places—more or less convenient—it was decided to give them the Palais Bourbon, much later telegrams than is given by which and been built in 1722, but never the Omaha papers. Compare them for occupied. They took possession of the building in the year VII of the republic feature alone is worth the money, as it necessary improvements had been made enables every man to protect his family. to render it suitable for the use to which it was then devoted.

From that time, under the different titles of "Palace of the Council of the Five Hundred," "Palace of the Legislative Corps" and "Chamber of Deputies," it has always remained consecrated to the service of the people's representa-

From time to time such improvements as economy would permit were made, but it was not until 1807, under Napoleon I, that the grand staircase, surmounted by the portal facing the Place de la Concorde, familiar to all visitors to Paris, was constructed. Then it was nearly total destruction by fire of its also that the colossal statues of Justice factory and offices. No sooner had the and Prudence, Sully, Colbert, L'Hopital and D'Aguesseau were placed where they now stand. These statues, by the bye, which look like marble, are in reality made of stone and covered with a coating of white glaze.

Under Napoleon I the building was at first called the "Palace of the Legislative Corps," and the deputies wore brilliant uniforms. This caused a writer of the time to say, "He gave the deputies a brilliant costume, embroidered with gold, and at the same time withdrew their right of free speech.

It was in 1814 that the name was changed to that the building bears today, "Palace of the Chamber of Deputies," or, as it is more generally called now, "Chamber of Deputies." But if the legislators of the year of grace 1893 do not wear gold embroidered uniforms there still remains in their ceremonies a good deal of the pomp and ceremony which usually appertain to monarchies.

The president of the chamber lives in a mansion on the Quai d'Orsay, the grounds of which join these surrounding the chamber of deputies. Before the opening of each sitting he is escorted through the long Salle des Pas Perdus (reserved for the use of members of parliament and journalists) by a detachment of infantry in command of a cap-Copy for new advertisements and for tain. The drums beat, and the procession is preceded by a gorgeously attired usher, who announces. "Monsieur le President."

Thus escorted, the president mounts his seat, high above the tribune from play advertisement must be given not which the members speak, and immediately there is a noise of members scrambling to their seats, like schoolboys afraid lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm tisements may be discontinued at any of being marked late. This part of the proceedings is about as undignified as the entrance of the president is imposing. After tapping his desk with a large paper knife, or in case of much noise ringing a brass bell, the president declares the sitting open, and a relative silence is es-tablished for a moment. The formal business of reading the minutes of the last sitting is gone through, and then the discussion upon the question of the day begins. When unimportant, everybody who is not engaged in letter writing talks. When the question before the house is of interest, silence is maintained until somebody sets the example of interrupting or perhaps insulting the speaker. Then the scene is one which has often been described by clever writers and artists, but which must be seen to be appreciated. The ushers inside the chamer, who wear evening dress, white ties and swords, have frequently to come between excited deputies, who, but for their intervention, would often come to blows.

These ushers form in reality the most conservative part of the assembly, for they, with few exceptions, grow old in the service. They are almost as familiar with the rules of the house as the president himself, and they regard newly elected members very much as an usher in a public school regards a new boy. They know that every deputy drinks while speaking, and one of them is espe-cially told off to order from the buffet the particular beverage with which a speaker is wont to moisten his parched lips during a heated debate.

It is upon these occasions that the French chamber treats the world to some of those surprises "which no fellow can understand." What is called in France le petit jeu des combinaisons is played, and often a government majority of today is turned into a minority to-

The fact is, that the majority of the deputies are men who would be loath to lose their pay of 25 francs per day and the honors attached to the post of representative of the people. That is why the fear of dissolution often induces them to give a ministry a majority rather than provoke its overthrow and the crisis consequent thereon.

Two ministerial portfolios are especially coveted-those of the interior and finance-for besides the importance of the posts there is an ancient custom in connection with them. The day after the acceptance of the portfolio one of the grave, white necktied, sword bearing ushers calls upon each minister and hands him an envelope containing 60,000 ing expenses. If he retains his portfolio but a single day, he never returns the $12,000, nor is he expected to.—New York Sun.
