OF ALL the promising industries of Nebraska none is of greater importance than the beet sugar industry. While yet in its infancy, the possibilities of its development can be seen in the operation of the Norfolk and Grand Island factories and the increased acreage of sugar beets cultivated from year to year. While the press of this state has constantly shown the benefits of extensive beet culture, there are many localities in the state where experiments have not been made because of a lack of general knowledge of the handsome results attending the culture of the sugar beet in the vicinity of the factories. The dissemination of reliable information of the results of this season's plant might perhaps claim the attention of the state labor commissioner.
