PRESIDENT CLEVELAND is said to have intimated that he will veto a free coinage measure, no matter upon what mint ratio it is based. The president is not accustomed to announce in advance what action he will take in certain contingencies, and if he has made this announcement he has departed from an old and wisely established precedent.

Editor Harlen rode his Victor up from Cambridge Monday, when east of Bartley he enjoyed a header which bruised both himself and his wheel quite badly. After arriving in town and getting rested and his dinner he couldn't resist the temptation to enjoy the scenery south of the river, here he again met the same fate; he owned up manfully that he was near the brewery when he had the last accident, but as editors never drink it must have been a stone in the road that threw him.

Quite a crowd came up from Cambridge to attend the ball game Monday. Our boys were done up as usual.

We are pleased with the last change of time on the R. R. No. 5 gets here much earlier, which is more convenient.

There are many ways of getting to the Exposition grounds. The guide-books will tell you this, but the guide-books will not point out the route that is best suited to each particular fancy or taste. After all, to the general sight-seer especially if time be limited, the most valuable feature of a guide-book is the map,—provided it be a correct one. When you purchase a guide-book, look through it carefully in connection with map, then tear out the map, mount it upon a piece of muslin, and always have it with you, ready for consultation when necessary. It will be easier to carry than the guide-book, and will enable you to go about the grounds without loss of time,—or of yourself among the unfamiliar surroundings. In this connection it is perhaps well to observe that in all probability no person will see every object that is contained within the six hundred acres covered by the Exposition.—From "At the World's Columbian Exposition," in Demorest's Family Magazine for September.
