

THE MINE SORCERER.

MALAY FAKIRS WHO WORK THE IGNORANT AND SUPERSTITIOUS.

They Are Not So Potent as They Were Some Years Ago—Ceremonies Observed by the Pawang in Invoking the Hantu, or Tutelary Spirit, of the Mine.

Miners in all countries have been noted for their superstitious beliefs as to various matters affecting their good or ill luck. Soothsayers, sorcerers, or at least lode finders, were in past ages trusted to secure the satisfactory results which are now nowadays more reasonably hoped for on the report of the mining expert and engineer. The latest survival of belief in the occult powers of the "medicine man" or sorcerer is probably to be found in the Malay peninsula, which contains the most important tin workings yet known to exist. The individual who thus guides his employers to fortune, or the reverse, is known as a pawang.

Until the practical termination of independent Malay rule throughout the major portion of the peninsula, about 19 years ago, the pawang was a recognized member of every mining staff, and recognized not only by the mine owners but by the petty chiefs, who alternately encouraged or obstructed mining enterprise.

So potent was he that he could foretell the prospects of a mine, levy fines (which went into his own pocket), direct the offering of animal sacrifices and enforce rules respecting the workings of a mine which but for him would have been simply ridiculed by the miners. Although in many districts his pretensions are now discredited, he still lingers on, superstition with the existing generation of miners having yet a firm hold in the more remote districts.

The pawang may or may not be the hereditary successor of a predecessor. In some cases he is self made, and attains his position by a few lucky forecasts as to the value of a projected mine. In a territory where, as is sometimes said, "if you dig up the highway, you are sure to find tin," the supernaturally gifted prospector has a tolerably easy task. Not that tin is always found when a hole is sunk. But a moderate acquaintance with the usual indications is quite sufficient. Chinese of limited means do not often trouble a pawang in the initiatory stages. But when the mine—"stream tin," or tin sand, with an overburden of 10 or 20 feet earth and gravel—is fairly started, the pawang suggests that he alone knows how to keep good luck in sight. Sometimes he is politely informed that his services are not wanted, and he leaves in wrath, predicting all sorts of disaster to the unbelieving towkay or manager. Upon the whole, however, he manages to get his way.

A fine physical appearance is indispensable. When engaged in any duty, such as invoking spirits or offering sacrifices, he is allowed to assume only one of two positions—with his hands resting on his hips or with them clasped behind his back. He alone is allowed to wear a black coat in the mine. As in the case of camphor hunters in Formosa and gutta percha hunters in Malaya, he uses a peculiar vocabulary. Thus cats, elephants, tigers, buffaloes, etc., must not be mentioned by their usual designation, nor are such animals (tigers unfortunately sometimes prove unpleasant exceptions) ever allowed upon a mine. Perhaps the oddest article in the pawang's "index expurgatorius" is the lime fruit or lemon, which under no circumstances may be brought to a mine, and should the juice be thrown into the mine water dire results are dreaded. Raw cotton, glass and earthenware or an unsharpened spear or kris are equally anathema, all the articles mentioned being offensive to the hantu or spirits which haunt the mine.

Assuming that the pawang is engaged by a mine owner at a fee varying from £15 to £80, his first business is to erect a platform or altar, constructed of a special kind of wood. The four branches, which serve as supports, have the bark peeled off for about 4 feet from the ground to where the twigs begin. The leaves on the latter are not removed. A square platform, measuring 15 inches each way, of peeled sticks is fixed to these supports at about three feet from the ground. A foot above this comes a railing round three sides of the platform, with a railed ladder with four rungs reaches from the open side of the platform to the ground. Fringes of cocoanut ornament the railing, and the whole construction is bound together with creepers, rattan, however, being forbidden. Upon it offerings are laid, and the pawang invokes the hantu or tutelary spirit of the mine to bless it with good fortune. A bag of tin sand from the first washing is the fee paid for this service.

Sometimes a cheaper kind of altar is made by placing in the ground a single peeled stick with its upper end split in four, upon which is placed the little platform above described. The next process is to hang an ancha, or square frame, about 18 inches each way in the smelting house just under the eaves of the roof. This serves as an interior altar, upon which the miners place their offerings to the hantu. The accurate hanging up of the ancha is a matter of special care.

These preliminaries accomplished, the mine is considered sure of luck.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Under the Monroe Doctrine.

Should European vessels land their forces and interfere in the affairs of Brazil, there is no escape from the conclusion that such act would constitute a cause of offense to the United States government. Under the light of the Monroe doctrine the administration can construe such acts as nothing less than an offense. If Europe can without let or hindrance land troops in Brazil and menace the security of that republic, Europe can do likewise in every American republic.—Minneapolis Tribune.

TRIAL BY ORDEAL.

Remarkable Story From India About Catching a Postal Thief.

The narrator of the following story some years ago had charge of a postal division on the western coast, parts of which had seldom been visited by a European officer. The people were for the most part simple country folk and very superstitious. One morning the narrator received information that a considerable sum of money, forming part of the contents of the mail from a head to a suboffice, had been stolen on the road. The whole affair was wrapped in mystery.

The only clue the police had been able to obtain was that one runner, whom we shall call Rama, had since the theft paid off certain debts in the village which had long pressed upon him, but there were no other suspicious circumstances, and the man had 10 years' good service. As a last resource it was determined to resort to trial by ordeal and for this purpose an aged Brahman, who was supposed to possess occult powers and to be in daily communion with the gods, was consulted and readily undertook to discover the thief. All the runners—a goodly array of sturdy Maharratta peasants—were summoned to the office, and under the guidance of a chetya, or disciple, of the old Brahman we all proceeded to a small deserted temple of Mahadeo, situated at some distance from the village.

It was a desolate spot and bore an evil reputation. The temple, owing to some act of desecration in the past, had been abandoned and was almost buried among weeds and tangled brushwood.

The hour selected was about 6 p. m., and the long twilight shadows gave the place a weird, uncanny look. The old Brahman was awaiting us, and as we approached appeared to be busy muttering incantations. The runners all seemed to be more or less under the spell of the hour, but the look of real fright in Rama's face was quite distinct. The Brahman, having finished his incantations, rose and addressing the men said: "You are about to face the gods. To the innocent the trial will be nothing, but to the guilty much. In the temple a magic wand has been placed on the altar. Each of you must go in by turns, take up the wand and turn round three times, repeating the name of Mahadeo. The wand will stick to the hand of the guilty one." By this time it was nearly dark. I glanced in through the door of the temple. A solitary oil buttee threw a fitful light on the altar, on which an ordinary bamboo stick about two feet long reposed among grains of uncooked rice and nut limes, the whole sprinkled with red powder.

A curtain was drawn across the door, and the men entered one at a time. As each one appeared the Brahman seized his hands and raised them to his forehead, and then allowed them to pass on and join his fellows. Coming to Rama, he went through the same pantomime, but instead of allowing him to pass on bade him stand aside. When the last man had gone through the ordeal the Brahman turned to Rama and said quietly:

"Tell the sahib how you stole the money."

"To my utter amazement," continues the writer, "Rama fell on his knees, confessed that he was the thief, and offered to show where he had hidden the balance of the money. He had succeeded in opening the mail bag without seriously disturbing the seals. The postmaster had not really examined them and so their having been manipulated had escaped notice. Needless to say, the Brahman was rewarded and poor Rama was sent to repent at leisure in the district jail."

Now the natural question is: "How was it done?" Very simply. The temple, the lonely glen, the uncanny hour, the incantations, all were merely accessories to appeal to the superstitions of the ignorant peasants. The "magic wand" was thickly smeared with strongly scented sandalwood oil. Rama's guilty conscience prevented him from touching it, as he firmly believed the wand would stick to his hands, and his of course was the only hand that did not smell of oil.—Times of India.

Overdressed For His Part.

A justice of the peace, who exercised the functions of that office in a portion of the state where such officials are permitted great latitude, had before him a suspicious character arraigned upon a charge of vagrancy.

The prisoner, who was quite well dressed, secured the services of a lawyer in court to defend him. The man pleaded not guilty, and the lawyer in concluding his remarks said:

"What, your honor, that man a vagrant? Oh, no! I insist upon his discharge. Why, see the good clothes he is wearing!"

"Yes, I see them," replied the justice, "and in consequence of their excellent condition I shall discharge him on the charge of vagrancy and bind him over for simple larceny."—New York Herald.

Uses For Rats.

Of all living things rats seem to be among the most repulsive, and when dead what can be their use? But even they are the subjects of production in the industrial arts. The fur is valuable and finds a ready sale. The skins make a superior glove—the gant de rat—and are especially used for the thumbs of kid gloves, because the skin of the rat is strong and elastic. The thigh bones were formerly valued as toothpicks for clubs, but are now out of fashion, while the tendons and bones are boiled up to make the gelatin wrappers for bonbons.—North American Review.

A Battered Legend.

A hotel in Switzerland bore on one of its walls the time honored inscription, "Hospes, salve!" ("Welcome, stranger!") After rebuilding the legend had to be restored, but the painter, who must have had some experience as a traveler, made a very slight alteration in one of the words, and caused it to read, "Hospes, solve!" ("Pay, stranger!")—San Francisco Argonaut.

I SHALL NOT DIE FOR THEE.

For thee I shall not die. Woman high of fame and name; Foolish men thou mayest slay, I and they are not the same.

Why should I expire For the fire of an eye, Slender waist or swanlike limb? Is't for them that I should die?

The round breasts, the fresh skin, Cheeks crimson, hair so long and rich; Indeed, indeed, I shall not die, Please God, not I, for any such.

The golden hair, the forehead thin, The chaste mien, the gracious ease, The rounded heel, the languid tone— Fools alone find death from these.

Thy sharp wit, thy perfect calm, Thy thin palm, like the sea foam; Thy white neck, thy blue eye, I shall not die for these alone.

Woman, graceful as the swan, A wise man did nurture me; Little palm, white neck, bright eye, I shall not die for ye.

—Douglas Hyde in London Sun.

An Old Family.

Several years ago there was an old family in Pennsylvania named Roth. Indeed the long line of Roths was about all the family had to show by way of distinction, and so much did they make of the long branches of the family tree and the Niagara of blue blood that had in centuries past coursed through their veins that people of the more recent generations really began to think these Roths were of some account.

One evening there happened to be a party in the little town of M—, and beside the great Roth family the guests numbered among others young Dr. Sharp. He was a popular and rising physician and considered by matchmaking mammas a particularly desirable catch.

Mrs. Roth had four marriageable daughters, so at the first favorable opportunity she cornered the young doctor and sought to impress upon him the importance of her wonderful family.

"Why, doctor," she said, "we all came over on the Mayflower, so I know you will not think me bold in asserting that the Roths are really one of the first families."

"Pardon me," replied the young physician, "but I have no hesitation in saying that your family enjoys even a greater distinction."

"Oh, doctor," gushed the old woman, giving herself a congratulatory hug on her coming triumph. "Indeed you flatter us."

"Not at all," he replied, "for I know you are the first family."

"Who told you that, dear doctor?"

"The Bible," he replied reverently, "for it says the Lord was Roth."—Boston Budget.

Count D'Orsay and Lady Holland.

A story going the rounds is one told of the famous Count d'Orsay. On the occasion of his first visit to England, while he was very young, very handsome and not easily disconcerted, he chanced to be seated at dinner next to the brilliant and singular Lady Holland.

That remarkable and many sided woman was in, as it happened, one of her imperious humors, and her young neighbor soon felt its weight. She dropped her napkin. The count picked it up gallantly. Then her fan, then her fork, then her glass, and as often her neighbor stooped and restored the lost article. At last, however, the patience of the youth gave way, and on her dropping her napkin again he turned and called one of the footmen behind him. "Put my plate on the floor," said he. "I will finish my dinner there. It will be so much more convenient to my Lady Holland."—New York Times.

Growth of the Human Heart.

Dr. Benecke of Marburg has made known his observations on the growth of the human heart, the fact appearing that the increase is greatest and most rapid during the first and second years of life, its bulk at the end of the second year being exactly double what it originally was. Between the second and seventh years it is again doubled in size. A slower rate of growth then sets in and continues during the period of maturity of other portions of the body. After the fifteenth year up to the fiftieth the annual growth of the heart is about .061 of a cubic inch, the increase ceasing about the fiftieth year.—Leisure Moments.

Royal Pin Money.

The Princess of Wales' long retirement has enabled her to save much of her pin money—£10,000 a year—and bring it up to a comfortable amount. In the past Alexandra has had plenty to do with that allowance, dressing herself most elegantly, her daughters very much less so, and fitting out the boys. Times have changed, her children have an annual income of £36,000 to divide among themselves, and the princess has lived aloof from London society since the death of her eldest son, thereby incurring but little expense for dress.—New York Advertiser.

"Neither is a dictionary a bad book to read," says Emerson in his essay on books. "There is no cant in it, no excess of explanation, and it is full of suggestion—the raw material of possible poems and histories. Nothing is wanting but a little shuffling, sorting, ligature and cartilage."

German papers give detailed descriptions of six statues recently unearthed in a crypt under the sacristy of the "Peter-Paul Kirche" at Liegnitz, in Silesia. The statues, which are all connected with one another, are supposed to represent apostles, and to date from the twelfth century.

Queen Victoria's "Jubilee Book," the volume containing the jubilee speeches and addresses, is 18 inches thick, has leaves 2 by 3 feet and weighs 63 pounds.

An advertiser in a New York daily a few days ago offered a reward for the return of two sets of teeth and no questions asked.

Method is like packing things in a box; a good packer will get in half as much again as a bad one.—Cecil.

ELECTIONS IN CORSICA.

The Loss of a Life or Two Apparently Not of Much Account.

The elections for the council general were going on all over the island of Corsica. The canton of Soccia comprises several villages, among others Guagno, noted for its famous mineral springs and also for the turbulence of its people. The elections took place in each village, and on the morrow the presidents of the several bureaux were to meet at Soccia for the formal declaration of the poll. In consequence of certain disorders that had already occurred, the mayor of Soccia issued an edict to the effect that none of the inhabitants of Guagno was to enter the village that day.

The inhabitants of Guagno chose to ignore this order, and 60 of them, all armed, and all angry that their candidate had been defeated, marched upon Soccia, headed by their mayor. Two gendarmes—not armed—had been placed at the entrance of the village and warned the advancing troops that they were to come no farther. The mayor of Guagno cried "Fire!" There was a general volley from his followers, and the two gendarmes fell dead. "They both bore excellent characters. One of them had been 24 years in the service, had been proposed for the military medal and leaves a wife and three children."

Such was the first account in the daily paper of Bastia. It occupied about seven inches of one column. The next day the editor had had time to reflect (or he, too, may possibly have had a significant warning), for in an article three inches long the account was somewhat qualified, and there was this important emendation, "It seems we were not correct in stating that it was the mayor of Guagno who gave the order to fire upon the gendarmes."

The third day there were just two lines, "In consequence of the unfortunate affair at Soccia it is probable that the mayor of Guagno will send in his resignation." That was all. I took in the newspaper regularly for a week, for I was curious to see how the affair would end, but there was nothing more—apparently no inquiry, no prosecution of the offenders.—Contemporary Review.

The Tower of Silence.

The Parsees will not burn or bury their dead, because they consider a dead body impure, and they will not suffer themselves to defile any of the elements. They therefore expose their corpses to vultures. One sees nothing but the quiet, white robes procession (white is mourning among the Parsees) following the bier to the Tower of Silence. At the entrance they look their last on the dead, and the corpse bearers—a caste of such—carry it within the precincts and lay it down, to be finally disposed of by the vultures which crowd the tower.

Meanwhile, and for three days after, the priests say constant prayers for the departed, for his soul is supposed not to leave the world till the fourth day after death. On the fourth day there is the Uthanna ceremony, when large sums of money are given away in memory of the departed. The liturgy in use is a series of funeral sermons by Zoroaster.

Of superstitions the Parsees have had more than they retain. Connected with burial is the popular conception as to the efficacy of a dog's gaze after death. Dogs are sacred and supposed to guide the souls of the dead to heaven and to ward off evil spirits; hence it is customary to lead a dog into the chamber of death, that he may look at the corpse before it is carried to the tower.—Nineteenth Century.

Eccentricities in Palaces.

The King of Siam, who, according to late reports, has had a palace constructed which he can submerge in the sea at will and so live under water whenever he chooses, is not the only monarch who has indulged in eccentricities of this sort.

For instance, history has preserved the memory of the ice palace built by the Russian Empress Anne, who punished several of her dainty courtiers by compelling them to pass the night in this great chamber of state, where they were almost frozen to death.

The Czar Paul, ancestor of the present Emperor of Russia, constructed a room formed entirely of huge mirrors, where he spent hours walking to and from full uniform—a singular taste for the ugliest man in Russia.

One of the native princes of Java cooled his palace by making a stream fall in a cascade over the gateway, and the Indian despot Tipoo Sahib placed beside his dinner table a life size figure of a tiger devouring an English officer, the roar of the beast and the shrieks of the victim being imitated by hidden machinery.—Harper's Young People.

Triple Pillar Saw Frame.

Among the recent mechanical constructions of note is a triple pillar saw frame, conveniently designed to occupy a space not much wider than an ordinary vertical log frame. In carrying out this plan the cross girder, which carries the saw frame and the crank shaft bearings, is in one piece, the whole being supported on three turned pillars, on which by means of screws connected by suitable gearing they are raised and lowered together. In order to limit the distance between the pillars as much as possible, the connecting rod is attached to the saw frame that is farthest from the crank shaft. There is a bell crank and flywheel at each end of the crank shaft, which enable the machine to work steadily at high speeds without excessive vibration.—New York Sun.

One For the Turk.

One of the stories that drifted out of the plausance is of the mosque where prayers were said daily at regular intervals for the natives. A pious woman passing accosted a young Oriental and chatted with him, finishing with a nod toward his prayer house and the remark, "I hope you go to church every Sunday, like a Christian." "No," was the quick reply, "I go every day, like a Turk"—which must score one for the heathen.—New York Times.

Greatly Reduced.

On November 15th, the Price of the

The Omaha Weekly Bee

Was Reduced to 65c Per Year!

No other paper in the country publishing 12 pages, or 84 colums of reading matter, can be had for less than $1.00 per year. This extremely low price is made by the publishers in order to enable every English reading family in the great West to read The Best and Cheapest Newspaper published in the west. In order to induce readers and others to raise clubs,

The Following Offer is Made:

2 Subscriptions will be received for.....$1.25
5 Subscriptions will be received for..... 3.00
10 Subscriptions will be received for..... 5.00
On clubs of more than ten, each subscription..... .50

Do not fail to take advantage of this offer. When sending in your own subscription, send us one or more orders for your friends and neighbors. Send us an order for your friends in the east who should be told of the great resources of this state. The Bee publishes more western news than any other newspaper in this country, and makes the best immigration document that can be sent to the east.

Address all orders to....

The Bee Publishing Co.,

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

It will please you
To see how cheap
We can sell you good
Goods in our line.
Price greatly reduced,
Quality the same.
Caruth and Son,
The Jewelers,
McCook, Nebraska

Kallstedt, The Leading Tailor.

Wishes to announce that he is in receipt of hidden new goods for the winter season. Call and make your selection while the stock is yet complete.

J. G. TATE, President. G. M. W. A. O. U. W. E. W. McDONALD, Secretary. Grand Lecturer A. O. U. W.

THE WORKMEN

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION,

Capital $1,000,000. Shares $100 Each. Monthly payment 50c per share. Money Loaned at 6 Per Cent.

Land for sale on time, or will trade for stock, also on Grain plan.

GEO. J. FREDERICK, Agent.

Office with H. H. Berry.

MANHOOD RESTORED! Guaranteed to cure nervous depression, such as Weak Memory, Loss of Brain Power, Headache, Nerve Pain, Loss of Manhood, Night Sweats, Nervousness, all drains and loss of power in Generative Organs, or other sex organs by over exertion, youthful excess, exposure to cold, or other causes. It is a pleasant, which leads to health, consumption or insanity. Can be carried in your pocket. $2 per box, 6 for $10, by mail prepaid. Write to Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Give a written guarantee to cure or refund the money. Sold by all druggists. Ask for it, take no other. Write for free Medical Book sent sealed in plain wrapper. Address NEW YORK DISPENSARY CO., 150 N. Dearborn St., Chicago. For sale in McCook, Neb., by L. W. McGonnell & Co., Druggists.