The Populist editors resolved not to advertise the big Republican papers, or to club with them or in any way assist in promoting their circulation. They do not generally stick to it, but the policy suggested is all right, and it should be adopted by all country newspapers toward all metropolitan papers. It were better for the country publishers to subscribe and pay cash for the one or two daily papers he needs in his business than to advertise them. He cuts his own or his neighbor's list every time the advertisement has any effect. This is one of the reasons why the country press is declining. People send too much money away for the big metropolitan weeklies, while the home paper, if it gets them on its list at all, must extend credit and lose half the amount in collecting what it can squeeze out of delinquents. There are two things that should never appear in a country paper—the ad. of a city paper and a dun of its own subscribers. The country publisher should adopt the cash system and subscribe himself for such dailies as he wants.—Lincoln Herald. Amen!
