Saturday was pay day.
It was hard lines railroading on the western division, Saturday.
Mrs. J. F. Forbes is entertaining her mother from Arapahoe, this week.
Supt. Campbell went up to Denver, Tuesday night, on division business.

Auditor Brandt dropped in the city, Tuesday night, on business of that department.
Master Mechanic Archibald is having his commodious residence artistically painted.
Mrs. Samuel Rogers went up to Longmont, Colo., Tuesday night, on a visit to relatives.
Ed Ellis and baby, Hi Thraikill's children and brakeman Cassell are tussling with the measles.

Felix Kennedy also visited in the city, first of the week, his wife having been here for a week or two.
Quite a number of the new machines are still not connected with shafting and power, at the round house.
The Burlington's net earnings for February, 1894, were over $72,000 in excess of those of the same month of 1893.

Z. L. Kay and Sam Rogers are having the thirty acres bought from Vance McManigal recently, broken up, and will put in alfalfa for the hogs.
The board of transportation has decided that Nebraska's railroads must provide transfer switches, in certain cases, at least, where the necessities of traffic require them.

Wolf and Moench shipped their hogs down from Imperial, Friday evening, and the same, about 60 head, were hauled out to their ranch at the west river bridge, Saturday morning. The boys have a fine little hog ranch to be sure.
There was over fifty carloads of stock shipped off this branch Wednesday. Wilsonville was right in line with six cars, five cars of hogs and one of cattle. A. W. Hunt shipped 3 cars of hogs, Rice & Son one of hogs and one of cattle, and C. Callaway one of hogs. The regular stock train had more than it could do and an extra train was sent up the line as far as Wilsonville.—Review.

C. P. Jude, B. & M. bridge carpenter boss, arrived in Benkelman last evening with his gang. They will be engaged during the next month repairing the railroad bridges in the vicinity of this station. Judge is a clever, big-hearted man and one of the B. & M. company's most efficient and trusty boss mechanics. He is prospering well in the world and is now building a fine home in McCook.—Bee.

The friends of Conductor W. G. Reddin and Dispatcher W. B. Mills are having a bushel of amusement at the expense of these two young men. And it all came about from the virtuous resolution of the conductor to treat his phaeton to a washing. Last Friday afternoon was the time chosen and the Republican river the place of cleaning. The dispatcher went along as referee. All went as merry as marriage bells until an effort was made to drive onto one of the numerous sand-bars in the river, south of the middle bridge. Alas, the treacherous quick-sand settled about the wheels of the vehicle and the legs of the horse, and the boys "were stuck" in midstream. The horse in its floundering broke the harness and walked out of the vehicle, dragging the conductor through the water holding to the ribbons with a death grip. Still the phaeton had to be rescued. The quicksand baffled all attempts to pull it out, and nothing remained for the boys to do but to wade boldly in and dig it out. This they succeeded in doing by dint of hard work, in an hour or so. But in the operation both were pretty thoroughly soaked, and it is most likely that such jobs will be performed in the future by the young men strictly by contract or proxy.

Communicated.
Mr. Editor:—In your issue of March 2d you tell the story of a young woman who hesitated to go on in the ceremony that would have made her a wife, because she did not wish to "yow obedience" to her husband. It was only when the matter was placed before her in its "proper light," that it was an "idle and inoperative form," by some married women present, that she consented to allow the ceremony to proceed. Poor little thing! Poor married women! Worthy disciples all of their Washington trousered goddess. Now it is in defense of that word "obey," and also in defense of home—prospective—brides who may not be so fortunately (?) surrounded by worthy matrons, capable and willing to explain away the antiquarianisms of the marriage service that I write.

The term "obey" has but one meaning, whether used religiously, politically, judicially or otherwise. Before priest or potentate, police judge or preacher, "obey," in the highest interpretation, in this case the only interpretation of the term, is the willing acceptance of a state of being in conformity with absolute right. A mechanical temper of mind, obedience to mere custom, outward impulses rather than inward spirit, recognizing no higher law than the opinions of others, no higher authority than that which drives the galley slave, is not obedience, is not "to obey." It is simply slavishness, making of one's self an echo, a machine, a "reed shaken by the wind," a "straight staff bent in the pool."

The development of mind illustrates the case in point very nicely. We are born into a state of lawlessness. A child knows nothing about law, it has no notion of law: it is a little savage, very lawless; volatile; gaseous rather than solid. Little by little it begins to learn law, natural law. As of heat, by burns; of gravitation, by falls. In society it learns other laws, of school, state, society. If these laws are obeyed the man is called moral; if disobeyed he is immoral. Now custom has made different standards of morality, but conscience, the voice of God, has but one standard. It is absolute. Hence I will do what is right, not because of any outward authority—father or mother, legislature or society. And, to go further, not even because my own conscience demands it, and not even because it is the law of God; but because God, the great Lawgiver, is love, I no longer "must," I no longer merely obey, I wish and desire to conform to the law, to have that law part of my life, to be the natural expression of it. This is obedience; then, I truly obey.

The original question. One bride comes to the minister and says: "Do not ask me to say 'obey'; I do not wish to be a servant of my husband; I am his equal." Another bride comes and says "obey." Not that she wishes to be a servant, not that she is not her husband's equal, but because reverence and love are at work, desirous to make her life one with his. She looks up to him and wishes to have all her life run in the channel of his noble life. And so the child looks to and beyond the parent, so the citizen looks to and above the statute. It is one of the awful disappointments of life to find our trust and confidence violated; where we look for a man to find a thing; but true obedience demands high standard. May we men not be found wanting, then the brides may not be found hesitating. F. D.
