A farmer living near Shenandoah has discovered how to make "pure maple syrup" out of corn cobs. The directions are as follows: Take a lot of red corn cobs, pour on some water and boil them; then pour off the cob juice, add a pint of C sugar and boil a little more until it reaches the consistency of syrup. The entire cost is about 15 cents a gallon and the imitation of maple syrup is so perfect that it deceives every person.
