A MISTAKE.

"Can you imagine me in lodgings, cheapening the butler?" says Belinda, with her laugh. "Or shopping in the Edgware road in a waterproof? Am I your idea of the person who would take an interest in such a recreation? My dearest Jack, if you think anything so absurd, you must be even a greater fool than I take you for."

"And you are so clever—so confoundedly clever, you know, Belinda," says Jack, looking at her curiously through his half-closed eyes. Belinda has taken the chair opposite to him—a great, deep chair which acts as a frame to her fair, assured beauty and the rich softness of her costly dress.

"I am honest," answers Belinda, "and romantic, too—that is, as romantic as most people. Theoretically romantic, you know, and in practice practical. My dear Jack, I may have been—I don't say that I have, you know—sentimental enough to fall in love with a government clerk, but I shall not be fool enough to marry him."

"Thank you," says Jack, still looking at her indolently.

"I am glad you are grateful," answers Belinda. "You ought to be. I am sparing you a great deal. What would you do with a wife who wanted about double your entire annual income for a dress allowance?"

Jack is understood to murmur lazily that any wife of his would be required to make a good many sacrifices.

"Sacrifices!" echoes Belinda. "How bourgeois and high minded we are! My dear Jack, the influence of the country clergyman, your papa, and the squire's daughter, your mamma, is painfully apparent even now. If people are not to marry to better themselves, why in the world should they marry at all?"

"Effete persons in the country, Belinda," says Jack, leaning forward and looking into her face with an odd intentness, "occasionally marry for love."

"Do you offer their example for my benefit?" says Belinda, laughing a little. Perhaps she laughs to cover some slight and unusual nervousness. A faint color flickers for a moment in her cheeks and dies away and leaves her pale.

"I have the audacity to do so," says Jack. "It's absurd and quixotic and ridiculous, of course. I don't think I expect you to follow it. The instances in which women have found affection capable of making life more tolerable than do a town house and a country house and a first-rate dressmaker are uncommonly rare. Yet they have been, Belinda."

"Have they?" says Belinda. "Is there any proof of that? Is there any proof that the women who have married for affection wouldn't be ready enough to barter it at the end of a year or two for those other advantages? The bright light for the mess of pottage, you would say. But my sympathies have always been with Esau."

"Suppose," says Jack, with something that is eager and strained under his light manner, "you come to the point. Do you care for me, Belinda?"

"I am going to be honest in every respect," says Belinda, with that color coming and going in her face. "So—yes."

"Will you marry me, Belinda?"

There is a pause.

"No," says Belinda, but as if it hurt her.

"Why not?"

"Honestly again," answers Belinda lightly. "She feels perhaps as if that lightness were a sort of safeguard. 'To put it bluntly, I don't consider love and a clerkship are enough to live upon.'"

"Is this final?" says Jack, still very intently.

"It is so final," she answers, "that I must ask you never to mention the subject again. I have my feelings, too, you know. I wish perhaps they were strong enough, as some women's have been, to let me do as you wish. But they are not. Spare me as much as you can. When I am rich and prosperous, I shall no doubt regret you, but if I have you I should spend my life regretting the richness and prosperity. I choose the lesser of two evils."

"And suppose, Belinda," says the man, "that you had been fortunate enough to fall in love with a rich man?"

"I can't suppose anything so absurd," answers Belinda. "That sort of thing does not happen outside novels."

"Sometimes," he answers, "though rarely. Yesterday I was a poor man; today, through the death of a relative, I am a rich one."

She looks at him suddenly. The color burns into her face and dies out of it. She reads contempt in his eyes—a scathing contempt for her.

"I leave here early tomorrow morning," she says at last and very steadily. "I will say goodbye to you now."

He opens the door for her, and as she passes him their eyes meet for the last time.—M. and T. in Black and White.

Nationally Shown in Tillage.

For 50 miles about New York the country is a region of small farms. Nearly all are carefully tilled, but the manner in which each is conducted comes close to indicating the nationality of the owner. The native American likes a lawn in front of his house and leaves uncultivated strips near the fences of his fields. Also his preference in the way of crops is for grain.

The Englishman and the German devote much space to berries and vegetables, and both delight in displays of flowers before their houses. The Frenchman is sure to be a grape grower. He, too, revels in flowers, but he fosters those that, cut or as potted plants, will find a city market. The Irishman is a raiser of potatoes, cabbages and corn. His home displays little outside adornment, but almost always there is about it an air of solid comfort, and one may be sure to see a pigpen not far from the cottage.

Abroad "land is land," and those who have been tenants of holdings that cost them an annual rental of $20 per acre retain their habit of close cultivation when farming in the United States.

Here, again, the difference between the American and the foreigner crops out. The former is prodigal of soil and lets the difficult spots alone, the latter utilizes every inch of dirt clear to the roadway and uses fertilizers with skill and advantage to himself.—New York Herald.

Lampblack.

The manufacture of lampblack, which is extensively used in the rubber and other trades, is an industry the extent of which is not readily understood. Two houses in New York alone handle over 20,000 tons, one house in Glasgow as much more, and the quantities traded in Cincinnati and Chicago are of like proportion. Printers' ink is made on the basis of 16 parts of lampblack, 1 part of linseed oil and 1 part of soap. Shoe blacking is made from lampblack, molasses and oil of vitriol. In every ton of fertilizer put upon the market there are 50 pounds of lampblack. A lampblack manufactory can be put up at the low cost of $50. It is made from the low grades of resin.—Hardware.
