

IMPORTANT FOOD TESTS.

How to Produce More Economical and Healthful Articles for the Table. The official food analyses by the United States and Canadian governments have been studied with interest.

The United States government report gives the names of eighteen well-known baking powders, some of them advertised as pure cream-of-tartar powders, which contain alum.

The report shows the Royal to be a pure cream-of-tartar baking powder, the highest in strength, evolving 160.6 cubic inches of leavening gas per single ounce of powder.

There were eight other brands of cream-of-tartar powder tested, and their average strength was 111.5 cubic inches of gas per ounce of powder.

The Canadian government investigations were of a still larger number of powders. The Royal Baking Powder was here also shown the purest and highest in strength, containing forty-five per cent more leavening gas per ounce than the average of all the other cream-of-tartar powders.

These figures are very instructive to the practical housekeeper. They indicate that the Royal Baking Powder goes more than 33 per cent further in use than the others, or is one-third more economical. Still more important than this, however, they prove this popular article has been brought to the highest degree of purity—for to its superlative purity this superiority in strength is due—and consequently that by its use we may be insured the purest and most wholesome food.

The powders of lower strength are found to leave large amounts of impurities in the food. This fact is emphasized by the report of the Ohio State Food Commission, who while finding the Royal practically pure, found no other powder to contain less than 10 per cent of inert or foreign matter.

The statistics show that there is used in the manufacture of the Royal Baking Powder more than half of all the cream-of-tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes. The wonderful sale thus indicated for the Royal Baking Powder—greater than that of all other baking powders combined—is perhaps even a higher evidence than that already quoted of the superiority of this article, and of its indispensability to modern cooking.

The Earth Has Begun Wabbling. Observations are to be made simultaneously at Washington and at Manila, in the Philippine islands, which is almost directly opposite Washington on the other side of the globe, to see what is the matter with the axis of our planet.

Observations show that for some time the earth has not been revolving on that important if imaginary support, as she has done for centuries, and scientists have decided that it is about time to find, if possible, what it all means.

Those who have varied the subject declare that if the variations continue in the course of some very long and very indefinite period we shall have an arctic climate at Washington, and the latitude of every place on the globe will be changed, and our geographies will be useless.

An equatorial telescope has been finished and before long diligent inquiry will be made into the whys and wherefores of the peculiar performances of old mother earth.—Washington Correspondent.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

Spread of the Plant and How to Eradicate It. The Division of Agriculture in the U. S. Department of Agriculture is in receipt of authentic advices on the appearance of the Russian thistle in various new localities.

In Bulletin No. 15 this division contains colored maps showing the territory in which it has been found to the close of 1893. It has since been reported from the following places: Hammond, Lake county, Ind.; Cannon Falls, Goodhue county, Minn.; Marshall, Lyon county, Minn.; Northwestern, Jefferson county, Neb.; Blue Hill, Webster county, Neb.; Stockville, Frontier county, Neb.; Parks, Dundy county, Neb.; La Salle, Weld county, Colo.; Nampa, Ada county, Idaho, and Manitoba, Canada.

In almost all these localities it has appeared only along the line of rail roads and, with the exception of Nampa, Idaho, is now officially reported for the first time.

The occurrence of the Russian thistle in Idaho is regarded by the Botanist of the department as a very serious matter, and he urges its immediate and complete eradication from that state. The region already infested by the Russian thistle lies in the plains east of the Rocky mountains and is, therefore, separated by this great natural barrier from the wheat raising areas of Idaho, Washington and Oregon, Nevada and Utah.

The only way in which it can enter this area is by introduction in impure seed and by transportation through the passes of the Rocky mountains, especially along railroads. Every endeavor should be used by the farmers and civil authorities of this region to exterminate it along the railroads, and to use only the cleanest and best seed wheat obtainable.

If the Russian thistle once infests this region its next step will be to cross the Sierra Nevada into the wheat areas of central California. The importance, therefore, of precautionary measures along the great mountain chains is clearly apparent.

From about the 15th of August to the 1st of September the Russian thistle begins to produce its seed, and, being an annual, the effectual method of checking its progress is to kill the plant by cutting, plowing and harrowing during or before this time. In the case of wheat fields which are already infested the grain should be harvested as early as possible, the stubble left long, the whole field mowed close to the ground, and after a few days drying burned over. Fields thickly infested may require in addition plowing and thorough harrowing. A copy of Bulletin No. 15 will be forwarded to any applicant, and a specimen of any plant supposed to be the Russian thistle will be positively identified upon receipt by the Department of Agriculture.

SOWING THE SEED.

A man sowed pumpkins in the sea. And hoped to get a crop of wheat; And then a stormy ocean on the sea, Expecting to raise pumpkins to eat.

Another person wiser yet Sowed watermelons on a hill, And said good cookies there he'd bet Of navy beans he'd eat his fill.

Another sage of wisdom vast Sowed peas from night till early morn, Expecting that he'd reap at last A wondrous crop of fine sweet corn.

I know a boy with bright black eyes Who thinks sometime he'll be a man— A man respected, strong and wise— Who works upon the same queer plan.

He swears and fights he chews and smokes, He cheats at marbles when he can, Now, please to tell me, little folk, How long before he'll be a man.

I know a girl who dreams of fame, Yet idles precious hours away, What can she reap but grief and shame, Who sows the seeds of sloth all day? —Sylvia Farnum

THE MERCHANT'S CRIME.

BY HORATIO ALGER, JR.

CHAPTER XIII.—CONTINUED. "Do you go back to the store in the evening?" asked the young lady, as he rose from the table.

"Yes, I think so. I am expected to keep open in the evening." "But you have an assistant?" "Yes."

"Then I advise you not to make yourself a slave to business. We shall hope for the pleasure of your company occasionally in the evening."

James Cromwell felt flattered, and looking full in the young lady's face, he thought to himself, "She is very pretty, and she seems to show me a great deal of politeness."

"Thank you, Miss Manton, for your kind invitation. I will accept it very soon—as soon as I think I can be spared from my business."

"You will be quite welcome," said Clara, graciously. "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." So runs an old proverb. This was illustrated in the case of James Cromwell, who ignorant of the real opinion entertained of him by Miss Manton, began, after a while, to conceive the delusive thought that she had taken a fancy to him.

but we are anticipating. Three evenings later, when supper was concluded, James Cromwell made no movement to go back to the store. This was quickly observed by Clara, who said, with a smile:

"You are going to remain with us this evening are you not, Mr. Cromwell?" "If it will be agreeable," he said. "Can you doubt it?" she said, with a look which quickened the pulsations of Cromwell's heart. "I get so tired passing the evening alone. Papa gets hold of a paper or magazine, and I am left to my own devices for amusement."

She invited Cromwell to their private parlor, which was furnished with a piano. "Do you like music, Mr. Cromwell?" she inquired.

"Very much indeed," he answered, though the truth was he scarcely knew one tune from another. "Perhaps you are a musician?" "Not at all," he said hastily, and in this statement, at least, he was correct. "Won't you play something, Miss Manton?"

"I haven't anything new, but if you don't mind old pieces, I will play for you."

She played a noisy instrumental piece, to which James Cromwell listened in silence, with very little idea of what was being played. His eyes were fixed rather on the young lady herself.

"How do you like it, Mr. Cromwell?" "Very much indeed," said Cromwell, hitching his chair a little nearer the instrument, and then coloring, lest the movement should have been observed.

"I think I will sing you something," said Clara. "I don't sing in public, but before an intimate friend I do not feel so bashful."

The words, "intimate friend," slipped out so easily and naturally that she seemed unconscious of them, but they were intentional and she glanced out of the corners of her eyes to watch their effect. She saw that Cromwell's eyes brightened, and the color came to his pale cheeks, and then she knew that they had produced the effect that she had intended.

"She is certainly very charming," thought Cromwell, "and she is very friendly. I don't think I ever met a young lady so attractive."

perfectly true," said James Cromwell, plucking up courage; "you sing like a nightingale."

So the evening was passed. The young lady paid assiduous attention to her visitor, and when they parted that task was accomplished. James Cromwell was in love.

CHAPTER XIV. A Declaration and How It Was Received.

Robert Raymond did not propose to rebel against his guardian's arrangements, however disagreeable they were to himself. He had written a letter to Paul Morton, and he hoped that his remonstrance would have some effect. But meanwhile he had determined to accept his fate, and act in accordance with the instructions which had been given him.

There was a private school in Madison, kept by a college graduate, and to this school Robert was sent by James Cromwell. He found himself the most advanced pupil in the classics, and he soon found that his teacher's acquirements were far from extensive or thorough. Still he could learn by his own efforts, though not of course, as well as at his former school, and he resolved to make the best of it.

Meanwhile the flirtation between James Cromwell and Clara Manton continued. The young lady was always gracious, and so far as her manner went, might readily be supposed to have formed a decided inclination for her admirer, for such the druggist had now become. She had a certain dash and liveliness of manner which fascinated him, and he felt flattered in no slight degree that such a young lady should have singled him out as her favorite.

One evening there was to be a concert in the village. James Cromwell brought home tickets, and said diffidently, "Miss Manton, will you do me the favor to accompany me to the concert this evening?"

"Thank you, Mr. Cromwell," she answered, smiling graciously. "I will accept with pleasure. I was wishing to go, but papa does not feel very well to-day, so I had made up my mind that I must pass my time at home. At what hour does the concert commence?"

"At half-past seven."

"Will it be time if I am ready at a quarter past?" "Quite so."

"Then you may depend on me."

Strange as it may appear, it was the first time in his life that James Cromwell ever acted as escort to a lady in visiting a place of public entertainment, and he felt a degree of awkwardness because of that. But when Clara Manton appeared she was so gracious and sociable that all his mauve hautes disappeared, and he walked arm in arm with her, feeling easier and more unembarrassed than he had supposed to be possible.

When they entered the hall he glanced around him with pride at the thought it would be preceived that he was the chosen cavalier of such an attractive young lady. Of the concert it is unnecessary to speak. It closed at a comparatively early hour, and the two wended their way homeward.

"Shall we prolong our walk a little?" he said. "It is still early, and it is very pleasant."

"Yes; that will be pleasant," she returned. "Papa is probably asleep by this time, and won't miss me. What a charming concert we had."

"None of them sang as well as you, Miss Manton," said Cromwell. "O, now you are flattering me, Mr. Cromwell. I cannot permit that, you know," she said playfully.

"No," he said earnestly. "I am not flattering you, Miss Clara. You are so—so—I hope you'll excuse me, but you are so beautiful and attractive that—"

"O, Mr. Cromwell!" uttered Clara; adding to herself, "I dare say he's going to propose. Well, it's just as well now as at any other time. How ridiculous it makes him look, being in love!"

Luckily unconscious of the thoughts that were passing through the mind of his companion, Cromwell burst out, "But it's true, Miss Clara. I love you, and I don't think I can live without you. Will you marry me?"

"I am afraid you have said such things to a great many other young ladies before. How can I believe you are in earnest?"

"No, of my honor," he said earnestly. "I never loved before. Do not doubt the sincerity of my attachment. Don't you think you can look favorably upon my suit?"

"Perhaps I might," she answered coyly. "That is, in time. It is so sudden, you know. It is not more than a month since I first met you."

"But in that month I have learned to love you better than any one I ever knew, Miss Clara. Can't you give me some encouragement? Tell me that I am not wholly disagreeable to you?"

"If you had been, would I have accepted your invitation this evening, Mr. Cromwell?"

"Then you do like me a little?" he said overjoyed.

"Perhaps a little," she said coquettishly.

After some time, Clara thought it polite to confess that she had herself no particular objections to him as a husband—a confession which filled the enamored druggist with delight.

"But, without my father's approval," he said, "I cannot marry without my father's approval."

"But do you think he will object to me?" asked Cromwell, in dismay.

"Papa is a very peculiar man," answered Clara. "I never can understand take say beforehand how he will look upon any proposition. Perhaps he may give his consent at once, or perhaps it may take considerable time to persuade him. I cannot tell. But whatever he decides, I cannot disobey him."

When Clara returned home her father happened to be still up. He had become interested in something that he was reading, and this caused him to defer his hour of retiring.

"Well, papa," said Clara, "I've got some news for you." "What is it?" "I've had an offer."

"An offer? Who from?" "Oh, from that ridiculous druggist, Cromwell."

"Well, what did you say?" "I referred him to you. He's going to call to-morrow."

"Well, what shall I say? Just give me instructions. Do you love him?" "Stuff and nonsense, papa! As if anybody could! Such a ridiculous creature as he is!"

"Then I am to decline the honor of his relationship?" "Not exactly."

"But you don't love him?" "That is not necessary in marriage. Thank Providence, I am not sentimental, and never shall break my heart for love. When I marry I want to marry a man who has got some money. Just find out if he's worth ten thousand dollars. If he is, and will agree to settle half of it on me, I will become Mrs. Cromwell whenever he says the word. Otherwise, I won't. But of course, this must be your condition, not mine. I am supposed to be perfectly indifferent to money. I dare say I shall rail against you on account of your mercenary spirit, if he can't meet the condition, and comes to complain to me. You won't mind that will you?"

"Not a particle. Rail away, if you think best. It won't break any bones."

"Well, I am rather tired, and will go to bed. Good night, papa! Just let my suitor understand that you are inexorable, will you?" "Very good. I understand you."

CHAPTER XV. A Mercenary Parent.

James Cromwell lost no time the next morning in waiting upon Mr. Manton. He was in that state when suspense is intolerable, and he wanted to have his fate decided at once. Accordingly, soon after breakfast, he was introduced into the presence of Clara's father, whom he found alone. The young lady, considerably foreseeing the visit, had gone out for a walk. Mr. Manton was sitting indolently in a rocking chair, reading.

"Good morning, Mr. Cromwell," he said. "Take a chair, if you please, and excuse my rising. I am not young and strong like you, but an invalid."

"Oh, certainly," said Cromwell, doing as directed. "I have come to see you, Mr. Manton," he proceeded, "on important business."

"Indeed!" said his companion, whose cue was to assume entire ignorance until informed of the nature of his errand.

"You have a daughter," proceeded the young man, nervously. "Yes, and an excellent girl she is," said Mr. Manton, warmly.

I am sorry to say that this was not Mr. Manton's real opinion. He and Clara, in fact, used to quarrel pretty often in private, and he had more than once styled her a cross-grained vixen and termagant, and used other terms equally endearing.

Magnificent Court Entertainments.

Some court entertainments recently have been magnificent. The court dinner given in Vienna in honor of the German emperor had peculiar features. Though the guests numbered eighty, the whole dinner was served on gold plates and dishes. The centerpieces and vases likewise were of massive gold. Really two dinners were served, because it was Friday. Beside each plate lay two menus, a fish menu on simple white cardboard with the imperial eagle in relief and a meat menu with the usual gold ornaments and the eagle in gold.

Avoiding Pain and Peril.

Defensive measures against the foe are ever adopted by a wise commander. You can be commander of the situation and strike a decisive blow at the start at that dangerous and relentless enemy, rheumatism, if attacked by it, by resorting in time to Ho-tetter's Stomach Bitters, which checks permanently the progress of a malady, among the most obstinate, painful and possibly dangerous against which medical skill and the resources of materia medica are arrayed. No evidence is more convincing than that which proves that the Bitters neutralizes the rheumatic poison and checks its further development in the system. For malarial and kidney trouble, dyspepsia, want of vitality, nervousness, liver complaint and constipation, Ho-tetter's Stomach Bitters is the leading remedy.

Crimson Clover.

A very great deal is being said and written about crimson clover. As a forage plant it possesses qualities worthy of consideration in localities to which it is adapted. It does best in a more southern climate than that of most parts of the United States north of a latitude of 40 degrees. In several parts of Iowa and northern Illinois it has proved unsatisfactory on account of winter killing. The plant is annual, and where it thrives it is sown in July or August and matures a crop early the next season.

Hall's Catarrh Cure.

Is taken internally. Price, 75c.

A New Musical Instrument.

A Swedish electrician and musician has succeeded, after years' trying, in making a new and, it is reported, a most successful musical instrument, which is played with keys like a piano. It has a frame on which are strung a score of tuned bells, a series of steel bars struck by metallic hammers, a row of steel strings of proper tension, an xylophone and a fraudulent bagpipe made of a bar of steel and an electric current. The music from the new instrument is said to be very pleasing.—Stockholm Letter.
