MALARIA—MISERY, A Case Too Often Seen in Malarious Sections,

He was a very raw-boned, hard-handed farmer, less than 50 years of age, but with a sallow and wizened complexion, peculiar to 70, just such a mixture of malaria and manhood as the Mississippi valley only can furnish—hardy, horny, homely and honest. He was unhitching from rickety wagon on an old horse so knobby and loose-jointed that the oft-mended harness seemed necessary to hold it together. A two-roomed, mud-chinked log house, a faded and slattern woman, a troop of underfed, frowzy children, some long-legged chickens, a tamerack swamp stretching away in all directions—these complete the picture, and ague had done it all. It had thus changed stalwart manhood and healthy womanhood to this gaunt ghastliness. Thrift became squalor and plenty poverty; weeds and shrubs overran well tilled fields and dismal untidiness had pervaded every nook and cranny of the once well-kept premises of Squire —of—La. While the Squire proceeded unhitching, the woman, his wife, began lifting out of the wagon the few groceries which he had brought from the village only a few miles away. "Where's the bottle of quinine?" she asked with a querulous, rasping voice. "You didn't go and forget that, did you?" "No, I did not exactly forget it, or get it, either. The drugstore man showed me a new medicine for malaria which, he says, is a great deal better than quinine, so I bought it. I have spent one farm buying quinine and I'm getting tired of it." "Well, we'll try it, but I haven't a particle of faith in the new fangled stuff. I should think they could find a better name than Pe-ru-na," she said, spelling out the name on the bottle.

Three years later Squire was seated on the front veranda of his new house; a pair of prancing steeds and a carriage stand before the door. The Squire looks 20 years younger than when we first saw him. No one would recognize the place or its inhabitants—a buxom, happy wife, strong and healthy children, a well-stocked farm, waving meadows, where once dreary swamps festered disease. What has wrought the change? Hear the Squire's answer: "Restored health did it. As soon as I began the use of Pe-ru-na instead of quinine we all began at once to regain our health, our spirits, our ambition, our enterprise and our strength. All these malaria had taken away from us. Pe-ru-na has cleansed our systems of all malarial poison and kept us from having another attack. This is the whole story. Pe-ru-na did it. It has also done the same thing for our neighbors. Malaria brings disaster and destruction—Pe-ru-na brings health and success. But, by the way, speaking of Pe-ru-na and malaria, everyone should have a copy of an illustrated book on malaria published by the Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio. They send it free to any one. I haven't got the words to tell you what this book does about Pe-ru-na and malaria."
