THEY say that Rosewater is cutting from his exchange list the names of those newspapers whose editors have made themselves conspicuously obnexious to him in the late state campaign. He perhaps cannot stand their poor manners and worse grammar and diction.

THE Hayes Center Republican expresses our sentiments on the contest nonsense to a nicety: "All this blab about a contest should cease at once. Let us accept the situation, go to work to uphold the business interests of the state, and act like men, as republicans should. There is plenty to do."

THE Cambridge Kaleidoscope expresses the opinion that John M. Thurston "will get the hearty support of the representatives from this section of the country, for they were elected partly on that issue and are men who can be depended upon to carry out the wish of the people who have honored them by an election." How about E. R. Bee?

Frank Moore had business in The Muscles Used and the Mechanical World

The chief muscles concerned in walking are those in the calf and back of leg, which, by pulling up the heel, also pull up the bones of the foot connected with it, and then the whole body, the weight of which is passed on through the bones of the leg When walking, the trunk is thrown forward so that it would fall down prostrate were not the right foot planted in time to support it. The calf muscles are helped in this action by those on the front of the trunk the auspices of the Epworth | body forward, and the trunk, slanting forward when the heel is raised by the calf muscles, the whole body will be raised and pushed forward and upward. This advancement of each leg is effected partly by muscular action, the muscles used being (1) those on the front of pelvis; (2) the hamstring muscles, which slightly bend the leg on the thigh; (3) the muscles on the front of the leg, which raise the front of the foot and toes, preventing the latter, in swinging forward, from hitching in the ground. When one foot has reached the ground, the action of the other has not ceased. There is another point in walking. The body is constantly supported and balanced on each leg alternately and therefore on only one at once. Hence there must be some means for throwing the center of gravity over the line of support formed by the bones of each leg, as it supports the weight of the body. This is done in various ways, and hence the difference in the walk of different people. There may be slight rotation at the hip joint, bringing the center of gravity of the body over the foot of this house. Already a candidate bobs Monday. Mother and babe get- take charge of the treatment of side. This "rocking" motion of the 10,000 cases of chronic catarrh trunk and thigh is accompanied by a movement of the whole trunk and leg over the foot planted on the ground and is accompanied by a compensating outward movement at the hip. The body rises and swings alternately from one side to the other as its center of gravity comes alternately over one or the other leg, and the curvature of the spinal bones is altered with the varying position of the weight.-London Hospital.

THE FOWER OF POETRY.

Scott's Description of the Chase and What the Ordinary Man Would Have Said. Take, as a single instance of the power of poetry, Walter Scott's opening stag escapes and evades his pursuers, but what a picture the great poet has put into words! Reduced to prose the ordinary observer and writer would have said, "They chased the stag several miles, but lost him in the Trosachs." He could not possibly have said in prose: The antlered monarch of the waste Sprung from his heathery couch in haste, But ere his fleet career he took The dewdrops from his flanks he shook; Like crested leader, proud and high, Toss'd his beamed frontlet to the sky: A moment gazed adown the dale, A moment snuffed the tainted gale, A moment listened to the cry That thicken'd as the chase drew nigh. Then as the headmost foes appear'd, With one brave bound the copse he clear'

And stretching forward free and far Sought the wild heaths of Uam Var. The poet began his picture with an incident that only a poet would have thought worthy of words, but what a picture the few words make!

The stag at eve had drunk his fill Where danced the moon on Monan's rill, And deep his midnight lair had made In lone Glenartney's hazel shade.

Fire Easily Obtained. The average civilized man would be hard put to it if he were compelled to start a fire without matches, tinder box or burning glass. But Lieutenant von Hohnel describes an African chief as not only accomplishing this feat, but doing it with quickness and ease. The traveler had asked him to show his skill.

the moisture laden atmosphere, with what rapidity he did as I had requested. The materials employed were such as we saw wherever we went—two simple bits of .wood, one flat about six inches long and not quite an inch wide, with a row of grooves on one side, the other about 12 inches long and of the thickness and shape of a lead pencil. The longer piece, fixed in one of the grooves of the shorter piece, was held tightly between the palms of the hand and whirled rapidly round and round. In a few seconds the wood dust which was produced by the friction, and which fell through the grooves, began to smoke. This dust was carefully nursed into a blaze, which was fed with fine grass and bits of cotton stuff. The whole thing is done so quickly that our men, even the lazy Wasungu, always employed this method on short halts for lighting their pipes. - Youth's Companion.

No Word Like the Doctors. Mr. Sydney Holland enlivened the guests at the annual festival of Poplar hospital by relating an incident which occurred within the walls of that institution. A man was brought in who was thought to be dead. His wife was with him. One of the doctors said, "He is dead," but the man raised his head and said, "No, I am not dead yet," whereupon his wife admonished him, saying, "Be quiet; the doctor ought to know best."-London Echo.
