

A Naval Engagement.
The new American navy has not yet produced any such incidents as one which is reported from Toulon concerning some French naval manoeuvres. The new cruiser Vautour began to carry on target practice in the presence of the fleet. Instead of hitting the floating target she sent three shots into the Admiral's ship, the Brennus. The first two only struck the bridge on which the Admiral was standing; but the practice improved, and the third shot brought down the steersman. Admiral Gervais thought this was getting close enough, and gave the signal "Cease firing."

Disbonored Drafts.
When the stomach dis honors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Toned with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of pure, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a consequence of the new vigor offered the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus reinforced.

Origin of a Game.
A letter has just been discovered among the archives of the British Museum dated as far back as the year 1750 and which gives the origin of the game of billiards as now played. The game, it appears, was invented in 1560 by a pawnbroker by the name of William Kew, in London, who was in the habit of taking down every night the three balls which hung before his shop, and to push them about with his wooden yard measure on his counter. Hence the name billiards, which is a corruption of Bill's yard.

WANTED: A MODEL.

(By Anna Shields.)
It seems so very strange, dear. Not exactly proper!"
Miss Seymour expected to see precisely the expression upon the face of her niece as did follow this opinion. Lena Seymour's great brown eyes flashed, her pretty lips curled with scorn and a rich color mantled in her cheeks.

"Proper! Society does not rule down here, Aunt Margaret! Besides it is a mere matter of business!"
A twinkle danced in Miss Margaret's eyes, but vanished, presently.
"Oh," she said, "you mean to make a profession of your art?"
"Oh, dear!" sighed Lena, "how many times I have told you, Aunt Margaret, that art will not accept divided homage. I hope some day to call myself an artist! Now," and the large brown eyes grew luminous, the lips smiled as if some vision of beauty woke a glad response in Lena's heart, and her little white hands moved unconsciously to clasp each other; "now I can only hope and dream, work and pray!"

Then she came suddenly out of this little ecstasy and said:
"I sent an advertisement to the 'Grantville Gazette' yesterday, and it is published to-day."
She took a folded newspaper from her pocket, opened it and read:
"WANTED—A fisherman to stand as model for an artist. Terms liberal. Apply at No. 3 Seaview Terrace, Ocean Place, Wilton."

"By the way, Aunt Margaret, the utter absurdity of that address never struck me so forcibly as it does at this moment. 'Ocean Place'—a strip of sea beach half a mile in extent! 'Seaview Terrace,' four empty and one occupied cottage. I suppose all the population of Wilton will apply for the position."
But nearly a week passed, every day bringing a repetition of the advertisement, and not an answer reached Seaview Terrace. Lena worked busily at her picture, a sea-cape, with a group of children in the foreground, a woman watching the waves upon a rock to the right, and a great blank space for the fisherman, who was to come to greet her. The subject was not very new or very original, but Lena was treating it with wonderful power for a young artist. She had worked faithfully under good masters in London, Paris and Rome for six years, and was an artist born. Her father had been proud of her genius, giving it full scope, while she was yet a mere child, and when he died he charged his sister to let Lena have her will, if she wished to continue her studies. So the girl, then only seventeen, when her routine of studies with her masters was over, took her easel and brushes for rest, for salve to the bitter heart-pain her father's absence caused, and, with her aunt for a companion, went abroad to study. She had been at home only two months when she took board at Seaview Terrace, and began her sea picture—her first large one on canvas. It was too early in the season for seaside visitors, still April weather, and Wilton was but a small place, so she worked outdoors, her easel facing the wide blue sea she copied with sometimes fainting, often exultant, heart.

Mortimer Gilroy called himself weary of the world. At thirty-two he had exhausted all the pleasures a liberal fortune, strong health, a cultivated mind and plentiful leisure afforded. When I say "exhausted" I merely quote Mortimer Gilroy. He had "done" Europe, Egypt and his native country; had been petted by society, escaped numerous cunningly spread matrimonial webs, and, while he counted his flirtations by dozens, he was heart whole, as he lay upon the deck of the Firefly, his own yacht, reading the "Grantville Gazette." He had come from a winter cruise on the coast of Florida, through the Gulf of Mexico, winding about the West Indies, till, weary of sea as well as land, he was sailing for New York when he put in at Wilton for a supply of fresh provisions.

"Hullo!" he muttered, "I do believe this is the beautiful artist I saw through my glass this morning, painting on the beach. Wanted:—A fisherman to stand as model for an artist. Terms liberal. Apply at No. 3 Seaview Terrace, Ocean Place, Wilton." She was very beautiful. I was sorry when the sun became too glaring on the water and drove her indoors. A fisherman!"
He mused a moment, then called: "Bob!"
A rugged sailor answered at once. "Bob, I am going to stay at Grantville for a few weeks. You will take the yacht home!"
Bob was too much accustomed to his master's sudden freaks to make any comment, and Mr. Gilroy, hastily collected a few articles in his cabin, packed a valise and went ashore. June had come. Lena had spent the merry month of May in a dream of perfect happiness. She meant no deception when she told her Aunt Margaret it was the rapture of artistic success that painted her cheeks, and made her eyes brilliant, her voice thrill with musical cadences.

Every day, when the weather permitted, she was upon the beach, working with rapid fingers and swelling heart over her canvas. Every day, at the hour agreed upon, James Smith, fisherman, presented himself as her model upon the liberal terms offered in the "Grantville Gazette." Had Lena been brought up in society I know it would have been impossible for her to accept James Smith at his own word, as a Wilton fisherman. But the young artist was a child yet in many ways. She had been educated with the seclusion of a nun, in spite of her foreign experience, and her devotion to her art had kept her still secluded from choice after she returned to her home.
It was, therefore, no amazement, but simply a delight, to her, when the handsome fisherman, who looked one of Nature's noblemen in his rough, picturesque dress, conversed with her intelligently, and paid her the courteous respect of a gentleman. Little by little, as they drew more closely together in their daily intercourse, James Smith let the brilliant intellect, the traveled knowledge he possessed creep out into sight. He gave her to understand, without actually lying, that he had been a sailor, and so accounted for his familiarity with the scenes she had visited and carried graven on her heart and brain. He looked over many of her sketch-books, wondering at the power in the slender hands, the genius of touch and eye, and, as the restraint of strangeness wore away his true manhood asserted itself, and his heart rose her! With all her wondrous gift, she was the purest, simplest maiden he had ever met. Ladies he had known by scores, finished in every graceful accomplishment, but never one more exquisite in refinement than Lena. Peasant girls he had seen with "beauty unadorned," yet not one more unaffected than this artist maid in her dress of cheap print, her hair simply bound in heavy braids of golden lustre.
There was the unaffected grace of girlhood, with the well-stored mind, of one who made books, music and art daily companions.
His conscience rebelled often at the deceit he was practicing, but he hugged the thought of the luxury he could offer his love, the toil he could spare her.
June was yet young when the picture was completed, and in the early morning James Smith, Aunt Margaret and Lena stood upon the beach looking upon its beauty. It was to be packed and sent to New York in the afternoon, and Lena, her heart full, said softly:
"How can I live if it is a failure?"
Believing she spoke of actual poverty, should her art fail to win money, James Smith, with a sudden, overwhelming love controlling him, spoke out. It would make my story too long to tell the words that made Lena's heart tremble and her eyes grow misty, while Aunt Margaret's wrath was kindling at the fisherman's presumption.
But when Lena's hand was fast prisoned in his own, when her eyes, love-lit, were drooping and her cheeks blushing under his gaze, James Smith said:
"But, though I have once deceived you, Lena, you may trust me now, for all time."
"Deceived me?" she cried, shrinking a little.
"I am not James Smith, but Mortimer Gilroy; not an honest, hard-working fisherman, only an idle, useless gentleman. You will not need to work when you are my wife, Lena, but can paint for pleasure only."
Then Lena's eyes flashed merrily, and she would have spoken, even if Aunt Margaret had not said, dryly:
"Perhaps it would be a good time to tell Mr. Mortimer Gilroy you are here."
"Do not look so bewildered," Lena said. "I am not masquerading. I am simply what you know me—Madeleine Seymour, artist. But Aunt Margaret wishes me to tell you that I paint now, have painted for years, solely for pleasure! I love my art! I have loved it better than any earthly pleasure since first my hand could grasp a pencil. But I am not working for money, because I have more than enough. I am rich, too, though I do not paint in satin dresses or wear jewels at the seaside. Still, I did not mean any deception!"
"And you would have bestowed your wealth upon a poor fisherman?" asked Mortimer Gilroy, with glad heart and loving eyes.
She smiled, answering:
"I think I found the pearl in its rough case. I did not know your social position, but I did know you were a gentleman in heart and education. I could not have loved you had your speech or manner been as rough as your dress."
So Aunt Margaret was satisfied, and society welcomed Mortimer Gilroy's artist wife, guessing nothing of the little romance that was founded upon advertising for a model.—New York Ledger.

HISTORY OF A RING.
From the Duke of Wellington, It Finally Reached a Pawnshop.
A gentleman well known in business circles as a bold speculator is one of the regular customers of a well-known money-lender in this city, relates the Boston Herald, and his usual pledge is a ring, a story of which is thus told:
"This ring has a history, and a romantic one. It has been pledged numberless times and the owner would not sell it for any price on account of its history, which he has related to me minutely several times and which I know to be authentic in every particular. I can give names except in later generations just as he told me."
Charles Carroll of Carrollton, one of the signers of the declaration of independence had two beautiful daughters, who went to England in 1794. One married the duke of Leeds and the other Richard Wellesley, brother of Sir Arthur Wellesley, afterward the duke of Wellington. At the marriage of the latter, which took place in the castle of Dublin, the bride received this ring from Sir Arthur Wellesley.
"You will see two figures, painted by Nomar, a celebrated miniature painter of that date, are beautiful in design and execution, and the manner of the setting of the pearls and rubies, to the eye of the connoisseur, prove it to be genuine without doubt. This ring was worn at Brussels the night before the battle of Waterloo at the ball described in Byron's 'Childe Harold.'"
"To make a long story short, the ring descended generally by will, through different members of the Carroll family, until it came into the present owner's hands by gift from Letitia, the last of the Carrolls, now mother superior of a convent in Baltimore. From the duke of Wellington to a pawnshop—does not this furnish food for thought?"

PHYSICIANS BAFLED.
Prof. R. S. Bowman, Instructor of Natural Science in Hartsville College, Cured of a Severe Illness by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People After Physicians Failed.
From the Republican, Columbus, Ind.

Prof. R. S. Bowman, the able instructor of natural science in the famous Hartsville (Ind.) College, is well and favorably known, not only as an educator, but also as a minister of the gospel, as for a number of years he was pastor of the United Brethren church at Charlotte, Mich., before coming to Hartsville.
I tried different physicians but with no relief, and also used many different proprietary medicines, spending almost fifty dollars for these medicines alone. I then succumbed to a siege of the grip in the middle of winter, and was left in a much worse condition. My kidneys were fearfully disordered, and my digestion became very poor. I was indeed in a bad condition.
"A minister in conference learning of my condition advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had heard much about the wonderful curative powers of this medicine, but it was with reluctance that I was finally persuaded to try it, as it seemed that nothing could do me any good. However, I procured three boxes of pills and took them strictly according to directions. By the time the last dose was taken I was almost cured, and in better health than I had been for years. I continued using the pills awhile longer and was entirely cured. I can cheerfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."
Such was Professor Bowman's wonderful story which was further endorsed by the following affidavit:
HARTSVILLE, Ind., March 16, 1907.
I affirm that the above accords with the facts in my case. R. S. BOWMAN.
Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of March, 1907.
