CHAPTER V.-(Continued.) "Yes," Gervis spoke, with a certain amount of stiffness. He had undoubtedly sought his young wife and won her for her wealth; but, apart from that fact, he was determined to make her a loyal and devoted husband. Already it burt him that money and the sacred name of wife should be roughly bracketed together.

"And did you know my wife, then, as Miss Fairweather?" Gervis asked. after a silence, while the two stood and surveyed the limitless expanse of white waste around them, with its boundaries of forest-covered, bear-infested hills.

"No: I never saw her until last night in the car. She is very young, and seems to be a high-strung nature. Is that so?" Paul waited for an answer.

"I think she is." Gervis slightly hesitated. In truth, though he would not have confessed it. Gladdy's nature was as yet an unknown country to him,

"Very imaginative, and given to alternate fits of depression and galety?" Paul went on. Then he hastily added: "I ask your pardon. You see, it is part of my trade to anaylze human character. I am always doing it-sometimes there last evening, and you don't see unconsciously. I dare say you think me an ill-conditioned Goth, and I hardly venture to request an introduction to Mrs. Templeton."

Gervis, and there was a new expression in it. The old sneer had died out, His dark, deep eyes looked straight have told you that!" into the Englishman's face, and there was a certain wistfulness in them.

together in untoward circumstances. Before their journey ended at Montreal, Paul Andsell had become almost intimate with the Templetons.

Gladdy's strange shrinking and terror of the scientist had entirely worn off, simply because he had ceased to bestow the faintest attention to her dainty person. His eyes never by any chance rested upon her.

"I might be a cow or wax doll for all the notice your fine philosopher gives to me!" the girl-bride said,

"Oh, well, you can't expect to have dry-as-dust scientific fellows in your train, my dear," said Gervis mildly. 'You must be content with ordinary men, such as your humble servant, for slaves. I don't suppose Andsell, poor old chap, knows a pretty face from a plain one."

"I'm not so sure about that," skeptically said the bride. "Why, I should not be surprised if he has a wife of his own here in Montreal!" "Not he," carelessly said Gervis. "He's a woman-hater, I should imagine. His bride is science, to which he seems to have given himself up body and soul. You should see his diggings, Gladdy! Never saw such a collection of weird and extraordinary inventions in my life. He took me me going again to such a creepy place. Why, he has got his coffin, all spick and span and ready for occupation, in one corner, and in the hall, instead of Paul Ansdell turned his face toward a hatstand, he has actually got a skeleton, braced up with iron, on the arms of which the crazy old chap hangs his or had been smoothed carefully away. | hat. Edging the screen a little forward. Paul got it adjusted so that Gladdy did not see the sheet of blank paper, then he gently guided her hand around the edge of the screen and placed it upon the paper.

"Write!" he said, harshly, and Gladdy obeyed. But from her position she could not see what she was writing.

Presently, as Paul's dark eyes intently watched the motionless pen in the slim, small fingers, it moved. Gladdy was writing something carefully, and in a slow, painstaking manner, much as a child under the eye of a master would do.

And while she wrote Paul watched her breathlessly. On, on the pen traveled over the sheet.

Glady's handwriting was small and upright and unlovely, the handwriting of the up-to-date girl of today. Paul's breath grew labored as he watched the pen moving. He could have dashed off the sentence in half the time; but then between Gladdy and himself there was at least a quarter of a century in age. At last the end of the page was reached, and the stylographic pen dropped from the limp, white fingers.

"Sign it! Sign your full name!" The command came in breathless syllables, as though the speaker was greatly excited.

The pen was instantly lifted.

There was just room for the brief signature-Gladys Templeton. Then, with a low sigh of exhaustion, the girl slipped backward into her chair, and Paul Andsell, after carefully blotting the sheet of paper, folded it and placed it in his pocketbook.

"I must get the names of a couple of witnesses, and the thing's done! But that's an easy matter in Montreal." As silently as he came Paul Andsell departed. Down the wide staircase he sped, and out into the clear, white "Look here, I am going to take you stillness of the starry night, his dark eyes blazing with a strange, triumphant light.

"Is it you, Paul? You have come home?"

A sweet, vibrating voice called out gently as his latchkey opened the door of the little suite of rooms or flat which he called home in the gay city of Montreal.

"Yes, I have come, Diana; and I have good news-rare, good news for vou.

turned the conversation abruptly to the situation in which the trainful of human beings found themselves.

"If you had not been in such a hurry to get back to England I could have shown you some pretty sport yonder." He pointed to the rocky fastnesses in blue. A stiff wind had got up, howling and swirling the snow into deep drifts.

"Bears, I suppose?" said Gervis. "Just what I should have liked ifwell, under other circumstances. I dare say you could tell one some yarns about the grizzlies yonder?"

Paul Andsell nodded briefily, and the two men turned to retrace their steps to the little prairie station.

"Do you live in Montreal, then? Is it your home?"

"I have no home," was the brief rejoinder. 'I suppose I am what you call a cosmopolitan-one who makes a nest in every one of the world's great cities. But here we are back at the prairie station. The weather's clearing, so I suppose our people will start on their way."

In the station and round the cars there was a stir of excitement, and people were getting aboard the train. There is my wife! She is standing at the window of the car!" Gervis caught sight of a little figure in a pale green and gold brocade teagown, trimmed with yellow lace.

It was Gladdy, and her small pink and white face, with its pointed chin, was now bent toward them as she gazed downward at the two men.

She was waving a little white hand in welcome to her husband; but when she caught sight of his companion her face blanched, and she shrank back from the window, at which Paul Ansdell frowned at once. Two minutes later, however, he was bowing before her as Gervis introduced him.

"We had a jolly good tramp, Gladdy, Mr. Ansdell and I, over the hard snow. It has made me as hungry as possible. And, if it had not been for your small ladyship, I shouldn't have come back. I'd have gone after the grizzlies in the mountain, yonder; but I warn you that next year I shall come back to pot a bear or two, and leave you at Temple-Dene." Gervis laid a kindly hand on the slight little shoulder.

Gladdy looked up timidly, and, to her surprise, Mr. Andsell had taken out a pocketbook crammed with snap shots, which he proceeded to show and explain to Gervis, taking no further notice of her.

It was through her brain; and her small hands lay limply in her lap, their waxen whiteness intensified by the violet satin of her evening gown.

It was not of her own simple past, nor yet of the wonderful happiness that had come to her so lately that prise. Gladdy was dreaming. Instead, dark, fantastic shapes and visions came and went, succeeded by grim forebodings. Never a strong girl, Gladdy, since the night of the fire in the snow shed, had drooped strangely. It was as if the springs of life within her were broken. The shock might or might not have done the mischief; but it was there nevertheless. As she lay back with closed eyes and whitened cheeks there was a distinct change on the round young face.

So thought somebody who had come, stepping softly over the thick, rich carpet, close to the little figure reclining in the low chair-so softly that Gladdy did not open her blue eyes. Indeed, the white lids closed down tightly over them, perhaps because a hand with long, thin fingers was waving slowly to | the tepees of that tribe. No child is and fro in front of them.

In a few seconds Gladdy was in a son, or to pass between two persons deep, motionless sleep, and standing looking down upon her out of his dark, unfathomable eyes, was Paul Andsell, the fire. But Paul Andsell had made great strides since the days when his masterful will took Diana from her simple home, and from her first love, to make her his wife and his tool. No longer for him did the humble provincial exhibitions of his mesmeric skill and his power over the minds of others suffice. Higher flights were today his aim, and more than one abtruse work on hypnotism bore his name on its title page.
