Sure and Profitable. An encouraging word comes from Red Willow creek to the effect that the farmers of that section are looking with much more favor upon the culture of sugar beets, and that a number of them have already signified their intention of joining the ranks of sugar beet growers, next season. The result, this season, have proven beyond a doubt that sugar beets can be successfully and profitably grown here, any season, even on the uplands, without irrigation and under unfavorable conditions such as this year. The Red Willow creek bottom is especially adapted to the sugar beet and will no doubt produce finely and profitably. Up to the present time the attempts have been few and the acreage small, but those now interested in increasing the production of sugar beets in Red Willow county will nobly respond in the future.

Sugar beet culture in Red Willow county is no longer an experiment, but an achievement. We have the proof, this dry year, on upland and valley, dry and irrigated, so that THE TRIBUNE no longer hesitates to encourage its widest culture in this county. It has one drawback: No lazy man should attempt to raise sugar beets, for they absolutely demand labor and lots of it; but they repay the laborer for his hire.

Perhaps no more certain avenue of profit is open to the farmers of Red Willow county than the culture of sugar beets, and those interested in the development of this part of Nebraska and in determining the certain, substantial and profitable future of this section may well put their shoulders to the wheel of progress and assist in the production of sugar beets. The crop pays and is sure; and of over-production? well, that is not a probability of a century.

THE TRIBUNE hopes to see the planting of next season a hundred-fold larger than the present season.
