The World's Greatest Meteorites

COLLECTING meteorites is apt to be an expensive fad. Not many private individuals could afford to indulge in it, but with a large institution like that of the American Museum of Natural History in New York the proposition of making such a collection is attended with less difficulty. Now and then wealthy persons of scientific tastes are prompted to make gifts of this sort. Recently one of the most remarkable meteorites yet found became the property of the museum through the generosity of Mrs. William E. Dodge. This twenty ton meteorite was discovered on the banks of the Tualatin river in Clackamas county, Ore., in 1902. It is known as the Willamette meteorite, and Mrs. Dodge is said to have paid for it $20,000, the largest sum ever given for such a curiosity. It will have a rival at the museum in the shape of the famous Peary meteorite, also a very wonderful specimen and a curiosity which reached its present abiding place only after the expenditure of much labor toward the accomplishment of that end. It came all the way from Bushman island, near Greenland, where Commander Robert E. Peary first saw it in 1896. Later he succeeded in getting it on board the good ship Hope and bringing it to the United States. It weighs thirty-six tons and is supposed to have fallen from the sky and struck the earth in the land of the Eskimos many years ago, perhaps before the advent of the human race upon the planet.
There is equal uncertainty as to when the Willamette meteorite started on its journey from an unknown part of the universe and found its course in space arrested by our own planet. But it has had an interesting and unusual history since a mining prospector stumbled upon it about four years ago and mistook it at first for iron ore. He kept his discovery secret and tried to get possession of the land upon which the queer mineral lay. Failing in this and becoming convinced that his find was of chief value as a curiosity, he set about removing it from its original location on to his own land, about a mile distant. Special trucks had to be constructed, but the feat was finally accomplished, and the whole proceeding was kept as secret as possible. But the owners of the land where the meteorite had fallen got wind of the fact that a queer looking object had been taken from their property and went to court about it. The finder claimed that, being a shooting star from some unknown region of space, it should be considered the property of its discoverer. The owners of the land where it had lain for perhaps millions of years claimed it as mineral property, whose ownership goes with the land. The court ruled in their favor, thereby establishing an important precedent for heavenly visitors that may in the future unwittingly hit the earth and about whose ownership litigation may arise. The Willamette meteorite was exhibited at the Lewis and Clark exposition at Portland. In dragging it to the exposition site twelve horses were required. Both the Willamette and Peary meteorites furnish evidence in themselves of their origin outside the earth. The Peary relic is as unyielding as a piece of steel plate, and relic hunters who think to chip off pieces of it are disappointed. The Eskimos, by continuous hacking, were able to knock off a piece now and then. Astronomers are not agreed as to the distinction that should be drawn between meteors, or shooting stars, and meteorites, though most scientists hold that there is no essential difference in their physical nature. Both move with great velocity, and before encountering the earth travel in orbits controlled by the gravitation of the sun. There are two classes of meteorites, the stony and the iron. The Peary and the Willamette specimens are iron meteorites, which are much more rare than the stony variety. Iron usually constitutes about 90 per cent of the mass of such meteorites, though other metals are found in combination. About one-third of the chemical elements known in the laboratory have been found in meteorites, but no new element has yet been discovered in them. Usually they have distinguishing marks by which they can be pretty accurately identified as visitors from outside of our planet.

THE $20,000 WILLAMETTE METEORITE.

Old Parliamentary Fines.
It is costly to be a member of the British parliament, but some ancient expenses are spared the modern member. An order dated 1640 runs thus: "Those who go out of the house in a confused manner to forfeit 10 shillings." Others enact that "all the members that come after 8 (the house met at 8 o'clock in the morning then) to pay 1 shilling, and those who do not come the whole day to pay 5 shillings, those who do not come to prayers to pay 1 shilling, such members as come after 9 o'clock to pay 1 shilling to the poor," etc. Still more expensive was it for members to go out of town without permission. In 1644 a penalty of £10 was imposed upon every knight and of £5 upon every citizen who should make default in attending the house, and a penalty of £40 upon every member "as shall desert the service of the house for the space of three days together (not having had leave granted him by the house), and he shall be sent for in custody and committed to the Tower." Week enders had a bad time in 1664.

Why Fruits Turn Red.
Fruits turn red when they ripen because of a wise provision of Mother Nature. It makes the fruit conspicuous to birds and other animals, and thus secures the dispersion of the seed. If the fruit were of the same color as the leaves it might easily be passed over. When the fruit or seed is inconspicuous, through either the want of color or the small size, dispersal is effected without the aid of animals, as in the case of the dandelion, whose seed is carried about by the wind, or of the balsam, the seed of which is ejected by a sort of spring. The colored fruits, such as the grape and the cherry, are furnished with succulent coats, which provide food to birds, who in their impatience often swallow the seeds or stones, which may pass through the animal's body without change. Seeds may thus be conveyed not only for considerable distances on land, but also from continents to oceanic islands, which may in this way acquire a new vegetation.

Some London Clubs.
London has many curious clubs, such as the Utopians, whose motto is "Serve God and be merry," and the Froth Blowers, whose members are said to be bound to curse and swear every time they enter the club. There are also many unregistered clubs which have no headquarters and take out no licenses, and there are also many clubs whose members are manifestly drawn together by some common bond of sympathy. Among these the London Daily Express enumerates the following:
The Boz club (admirers of Charles Dickens).
The '05 club (amicability and the arts).
The Royalists (gruffness and diamonds).
The Castaways' club (resigned naval officers).
The Lost Legion (for empire pioneers).

The Ways of Madeira.
The people of Madeira are as harmless as their country. The stranger meets with no snakes and need not fear mosquitoes; neither has he to take any precautions against being molested in the most out of the way parts. Everywhere civility, politeness and pleasant faces will greet him. The prices asked are grotesque, often five times what will be finally accepted. Some find the absence of fixed prices abroad a great nuisance, but the bargaining in Madeira is so good humored and can be made so amusing that the change of custom in this respect is rather refreshing.

A Picturesque Wedding.
An interesting wedding recently took place in England. The bridegroom was a fireman, and accordingly the members of the local fire brigade attended the wedding. They formed up outside the church and made an arch with their axes, under which the bride and bridegroom walked. Then the firemen drew the happy couple home in a carriage, blowing their whistles as they went through the streets.

German Silver.
One of the oddities of nomenclature is that the combination of metals known as German silver contains no silver in its composition and is of Chinese and not of German origin. It was introduced into Europe by the Germans, and for some time it was not generally known that they had simply borrowed it from the Chinese.
Glandular Swellings.
Here is a remedy for goiter and glandular swellings: Glycerinated iodine lotion—iodide of potassium, two drams; distilled water, one pint; glycerine (pure), one ounce. Dissolve the iodide in the water, then add the glycerine. Apply with antiseptic gauze or fine linen.

On His Dignity.
Mr. Q. Ponce—No, sir; my daughter would starve if she married you. Mr. Nocoyn—Oh, well, if you're the sort of man that would let your own daughter starve I've no desire to become a relative of yours. I withdraw my request, sir.—Cleveland Leader.

Longing For a Sonker.
Hobbs—Queer, isn't it, that it never rains when one wants it? Dobbs—Garden in need of rain? Hobbs—No, it's myself. My wife gave me a new umbrella for a birthday present, and it hasn't rained since.

Balanced.
The Caller—Your art gallery is a treat. This picture especially is delightful; the values are so well balanced. Mr. Porkham—That's right—frame, $200; picture, same price.—Puck.
