Patrick Sheedy, Art Connoisseur

Remarkable Career of the Retired Gambler, Who Is Now a Picture Sharp-How He Recovered the Stolen Gainsborough.

AT SHEEDY, retired gambler, and art connoisseur, has become a phi-how to judge the good points of a picture and how to tell a masterpiece from a mere smudge, so that Mrs. Parvenu may not pay large sums for chromos under the impression that she is buying old masters.

Sheedy has had a good deal of experience in connection with noted paintings, and a few years ago he did something which linked his name permanently with that of Thomas Gainsborough, the English oil painter of a hundred years ago. He caused to be restored to its rightful owners the celebrated portrait of the Duchess of Devonshire by Gainsborough, which for a quarter of a century had been securely hidden by the man who stole it.

The Gainsborough portrait has had a history more curious and interesting than that of any painting known to the world. In the first place it was interesting as to its subject. The beautiful duchess who was painted by Gainsborough died in 1806, just a hundred years ago. She was famous as "the kissing duchess." Her husband was a politician, and when he ran for office the duchess used to go to the polls and buy votes for him. She paid one kiss for one vote. The voters said it was well worth the price, and many of them sighed because they had but one vote to give for their country.

Early in the seventies the Gainsborough portrait was bought by the Ag-news, London art dealers, for $55,000. Up to that time that was the highest price ever paid for a painting by an English artist. The fact was extensively exploited in the press. One Adam Worth, a native of New York and a notorious criminal along the lines of picking pockets, forging and bank swindling, not to speak of burglaries, conceived the idea of stealing the portrait and holding it for ransom. He managed to get into the room where the blg picture was hung, slashed the canvas from its frame, rolled it up and carried it away.

For twenty-five years the detectives of Europe and America searched in vain for the portrait. Worth was living under an assumed name as a fashionable London gentleman. In the course of his career he had met Pat Sheedy. The gambler was widely known as "square" in his profession and in all his dealings with men, good and bad. Worth had confidence in him. Sheedy learned that Worth had stolen the Gainsborough. William A. Pinkerton was a friend of Sheedy. The gambler arranged with the detective to restore the portrait on the payment of the ransom money demanded by the thief, $25,000. The transaction took place in Chicago, art, which Morgan declines to bring

EDWARD H. HARRIMAN.

His Fight For Control of the Illinois Central and His Personality.

The contest for the control of the Illinois Central railroad, which has recently been a leading subject of Wall street discussion, resulted in further increase in the power of Edward H. Harriman as a railroad king. By the election of Mr. Harriman's candidate for the presidency of the road James T. Harahan, to succeed Stuyvesant Fish it is believed that a close alliance will be established between the Union Pacific and the Illinois Central. This would be in accord with the fulfillment of Mr. Harriman's long cherepigrammatist | ished plan for a system extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In this great plan the Illinois road was the lanthropist. through his railroad connections. The latter remains a director in the Illinois Central and, it is said, will retain his position in the directorate and continue his fight against domination of the Illinois Central by the Union Pacific. He claims the election was illegal.

The incident of Mr. Harriman's remark regarding his relations with ex-Governor B. B. Odell is still fresh in the public memory. It was while interest in the work of the now famous Armstrong insurance committee was at its height and Mr. Harriman was in the witness chair. Chief Inquisitor Charles E. Hughes, now governor elect of New York, asked him the following question:

"It has been charged that through your relations with Mr. Odell you you say to that?" And the railroad magnate calmly replied, "Well, I should think Mr. Odell had political influence because of his relations with
