TALKED TOO MUCH.

Legacy Cost Him His Membership in the Philosophers' Club.

"I was visiting at my old home in Munich, Bavaria," said Henry Meyer, the artist, "when my father one evening proposed to take me with him to the Philosophers' club if I would like to go. I had heard a great deal about this club and jumped at the chance to visit it, knowing that I should meet there some of the most famous thinkers of all Germany.

"As we neared the club my father cautioned me not to talk too much, since it might be objectionable to some of the eminent thinkers.

"In the one large room which constituted the club's quarters we found a score or more of learned looking men sitting silently puffing their long stemmed pipes. For fifteen or twenty minutes not a sound was heard louder than the sizzling of tobacco in the pipes; then one of the men who seemed to be in the most profound state of meditation removed his pipe from between his lips, nodded his head in a reflective way and said:

"Yah."

"He seemed to have solved the deep problem on which he had been thinking, and I expected him to launch upon the tide of time some grand eternal truth fresh from the drydock of his mind. But he only returned his pipe to his mouth and subsided into that dense silence from which he had emerged only for the moment.

"Half an hour passed before another word was spoken; then a great philosopher at the other side of the room removed his pipe from his lips, nodded his massive head slowly and in that same tone of abstraction said:

"Yah."

"He, too, I presumed, had solved some great problem, and I listened for an exposition of it, but he merely placed his pipe back between his teeth and settled down again to that silence which was almost dafnil.

"It was nearly an hour before anybody spoke again. This time it was a hoary headed old philosopher, who took his pipe from his mouth, wagged his head and remarked, as had his predecessors:

"Yah."

"The next day my father delighted me by telling me that I had been admitted as a member of the Philosophers' club and was free to attend its meetings. So I was present at the next one, a few evenings later.

"With my pipe in my mouth, I observed the silence that seemed to be so popular there until four or five of the leading thinkers had in as many half hours removed their pipes and uttered the customary 'Yah.' Then I thought it was up to me to prove that I was a worthy member who also had things on his mind. So I removed my pipe, nodded my head and said:

"Yah, yah."

"The next day I learned that I had been expelled for talking too much."—Willis Brooks in Brooklyn Eagle.

An Extraordinary Bombardment.

One of the most extraordinary hoaxes on record is said to have been played upon the Dewan Lalla Moolraj, a native potentate of the Punjab, during the second Sikh war, in the winter of 1848-49. The British army, commanded by Sir Hugh Gough, had shut up the Dewan and his forces in the fortified city of Mooltan. One day the besiegers were amazed by the thunderous sound of a most extraordinary cannonade, followed not by shot or shell, but by an assortment of miscellaneous provisions in a very fragmentary condition raining into the British lines. The Sikh chieftain, it was afterward discovered, had found in the city a large store of canned meats of the nature of which he was completely ignorant. A native spy in British pay gravely informed him that they were powerful explosives, and hence for some days the British camp was greeted with showers of Strassburg pates and other more or less mangled but perfectly eatable tinned food.—Scrap Book.

Faking a Living Picture.

Probably the most notable faked living picture ever produced was that which purported to give a representation of the actual scene inside Westminster abbey at the king's coronation. The production was the work of an inventive Frenchman, who had special scenery of the abbey painted and reproductions of the historical costumes made. Then a number of French actors were made up to represent the king, the aged primate and other central figures—and remarkably lifelike they were. The mock coronation ceremony took place at a quiet little village in Brittany, and the films were sent to London for reproduction in one of the leading houses of entertainment. The managers, however, made no attempt to impose on the public, and openly confessed that the scene was a fake.—London Mail.

The Queer Parson Bird.

A queer bird is the poo honey eater of New Zealand. Its throat is adorned with small white feathers, which, from their resemblance to clerical bands, have gained for it the name "parson bird." Its metallic green plumage, with bronze and purplish reflections, is very beautiful. Its long and rather slender beak is curved. It has rather large feet, and the length of its tail is considerable. This bird is plentiful on both the north and south islands of New Zealand. It is a good songster and mimic, and its lively temperament renders it a most interesting cage bird. Its food consists of berries, insects and honey. It has an extensible tongue, the tip of which is forked and, being covered with fibers, forms a kind of brush, most useful to the parson bird in gathering its food.
