The services on Friday night were unique. With the Bishop on the platform, flanked by the pastor, and the Board of Trustees of the church, the last evidence of indebtedness of the church, was formally committeed to the flames. As this work was in progress, the lights on the platform were turned off, and a beautiful photograph of the actors in this ceremony was taken.

In place of Rev. Dr. Kynett, of Philadelphia, who should have spoken on "Home Missions and Church Extension," but was not able to reach us, Bishop Warren then delivered a powerful address. His general theme was "Home Missions," but he discussed it in a manner very unusual and unusually sas, the other day. Thirty-two head striking. So there were; pend on the wind. twenty-eight hundred people lost their lives on the guillotine. But one hundred thousand Huguenots were slaughtered under Louis XIV. The very excesses of the Revolutionists were less sanguinary than was the so-called established order.

There are fourteen inventions that, as the world now is, must go where ever man shall be. Among them are the telegraph, the telephone, the sewing machine, the writing machine-all of them products of American genius.
