Must Appear in District Court.

Squire Berry had a case from Indianola before him, Monday. The title was "The State of Nebraska vs. Charles H. King, and the manor involved a small strip of land along the east side of the town site of Indianola and between the site and the addition of the Lincoln Land Company.

Charles H. King recently bought some of this land from the land company and fenced off what had been used as a street or road, plowing up the same.

William Plourd as complaining witness brought the action for obstructing and plowing up a street or highway, and many witnesses from Indianola appeared to testify in the case.

While it was shown that the street had never been legally and formally laid out and dedicated, the evidence indicated that it had been used for thirty years as a highway, and was generally regarded as a street or highway in fact.

On this theory the squire held the defendant Mr. King to the next term of district court under a bond $200, which was provided by Mr. King.
