Campaign Figures

A Few Side Lights on the Big War of the Politicians. Taft and Senator La Follette. Amenities of the Canvass.

T. COLEMAN DU PONT, whose resignation as chairman of the speakers' bureau of the Republican national committee and also as a member of the executive committee formed one of the much discussed episodes of the campaign, is a member of the famous Delaware family that has been making powder for the United States government for over a century. It was his connection with the so called powder trust, against which the federal government has instituted proceedings, that led to his resigning from connection with the Republican canvass. In his letter to Chairman Hitchcock he said that he was "not willing to be in anywise the means of bringing criticism upon the party organization," however unfounded any such criticism might be.

The Du Pont family, one member of which is General Henry A. du Pont, senator from Delaware, is very proud of its ancestry and the services rendered by the Du Ponts of the past to the country. General T. C. du Pont, who is several times a millionaire, once acted temporarily as conductor of a trolley car. Mr. du Pont was on his way to his office and was standing on the rear of the car smoking. The conductor was a new man and was moving rather slowly in collecting fares. The car was stopping and starting frequently, and without saying anything Mr. du Pont, who used to be a trolley line manager, took command of the rear end of the car. An old woman with a market basket signaled the car, and it stopped. Picking up the market basket, Mr. du Pont helped the old woman on the car. Then he seized the bell rope—ding-ding when the bell and the car started. Some one rose at the next crossing to get off. Once more the powder man pulled the bell, and the car stopped. The passenger alighted, and ding-ding went the bell again. Half a dozen times the powder manufacturer gave the signal to start and stop before the car reached his street, when he called out goodby to the conductor and walked to his office.

One of the interesting incidents of the campaign was the appearance on the platform together in Wisconsin of Judge Taft and Senator Robert M. La Follette, who was himself a candidate for the presidential nomination of his party at the Chicago convention. It was at Madison that the meeting occurred, and the two former rivals complimented each other. Senator La Follette referring to Judge Taft as a Republican of progressive ideas who had faithfully discharged all the heavy tasks laid upon him. A snapshot was obtained of the two eminent Republicans as they rode together in a carriage.

him much prominence in the presidential campaign, has a smooth shaven face. Among the supporters of the Independence party, of which he is a leading champion, are many former Populists, and a cartoonist has taken the liberty to portray the New York editor arrayed in all the glory of a beard like that which some members of the People's party have been represented as wearing. The whiskers make a big change in Mr. Hearst. In the WILLIAM R. HEARST AS HE IS AND AS HE MIGHT BE.

Mr. Hughes for governor of New York he once described his opponent, who sports a luxuriant but not lengthy beard, as "an animated feather duster." While the whiskers question did not attain in that campaign to the exact proportions of an issue, it figured conspicuously among the side lights of politics.

A new emblem has been adopted by the Prohibitionists in Illinois. It is the camel. Alonzo E. Wilson, state chairman of the party, announced a short time ago that it had been decided to choose the animal which can go eight days without taking a drink as the Prohibition mascot in place of the emblems of the fountain and the rising sun, which have stood as the insignia of Prohibition.

Among the reasons advanced by Mr. Wilson for the selection are that the camel is the original "water wagon," that it can discern a fresh supply of water farther than any other quadruped, that it can travel faster than the elephant or the donkey and that it always has a hump on itself.

Nothing is said of the fact that the camel can go without water for eight days.

Aaron S. Watkins of Ohio, the Prohibition candidate for vice president, has been touring the south, where the cause he represents has been making great gains in recent years. He has spoken to large audiences on this trip and during October will speak in New England and the states of the middle west.

When Secretary Urey L. Woodson of the Democratic national committee took the last count he had disposed of some 500 song writers, poets and freaks who had been to him to propose a scheme to elect Mr. Bryan, Secretary William Hayward of the Republican committee has lost track of the individuals who have been to him with the same laudable desire, but it is safe to say that the number was no less. All of the applicants believe that both parties have large rolls of money to dispense for a new method of convincing the people of the merits of the two candidates, and it is hard to dispossess them of the idea. The men in charge at the headquarters of both parties are adepts in the art of making the visitors feel that they are welcome, but that it is just an unlucky chance that prevented their schemes from being adopted. Some of them are grievously disappointed, because they are undoubtedly sincere and may have come a considerable distance to give the respective party leaders the benefit of their thoughts.

It is many years since the surge of Wolfert's Roost, David Bennett Hill, has taken an active part in a political campaign. In the two previous campaigns in which Mr. William J. Bryan led his party Mr. Hill's attitude was not that of active support. For this reason the announcement that the former governor and senator has decided this year to take a hand in the game of politics has occasioned comment and revived memories of the times when Mr. Hill was himself a leading figure in the political arena. Mr. Bryan recently paid a visit to the home of the New York statesman near Albany.

Burma.

Burma, the "land of pagodas" and the "land of the yellow robed priests," was formerly an independent monarchy whose king ruled in barbaric splendor and power. Today it is simply a province of British India. Burma is separated from the main peninsula by the bay of Bengal and is a narrow strip of country lying along the western edge of the most eastern of Asia's three great southern peninsulas.

The real test is in the baking.

Other Baking Powders may make broad claims, but when it comes to the production of real delicious biscuit, cakes and pastry proves its real worth. This is because of its much greater leavening power and the strict purity of its ingredients. It costs only a trifle more than the cheap and big can brands and much less than the Trust Baking Powders.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER
