Advertisers Town Makers.

The trade territory of a town is not dependent upon the distance to neighboring trade points. The trade territory depends upon the enterprise of the merchants and the residents of the town. If a town does not reach after the trade, it will come only as fast as it has to, and it will grow as is forced to. But if the merchants go after business in the surrounding country, advertising in every possible way, and making good every word of their advertising, trade will come from an ever-increasing radius, the town will gain a reputation for being awake and it will forge to the front. It is the men in the town, and not altogether the men living within a certain number of miles from it that makes the town.—Ex.

SENATOR GORE OF OKLAHOMA, WHOSE BILIBERY CHARGES STIRRED CONGRESS, (Continued) and to modify the rules. In the house after a memorable fight they removed the speaker from the rules committee, which they enlarged and caused to be elected by the house itself. Their chief fight was against the Payne-Aldrich tariff and against what they termed Cannonism. It is generally agreed that their activity had much to do with the retirement of Aldrich and Hale in the senate and to have made Speaker Cannon's re-election impossible. Through their influence the pigeonholing of bills has to an extent been abrogated.

Reduced Appropriations.

One of the watchwords of the session was economy, and, while no vast saving has been made, the chairman of the ways and means committee stated at the close of the session that the aggregate of appropriations would show some reduction from the previous year and compared to the normal increase in appropriations due to the growth of the country would show material saving. He gave the credit for this to the president. In this connection Mr. Taft sent in a severe criticism of the rivers and harbors bill, usually known as the "pork barrel." While he signed the measure, he frankly threatened that if another such were ever sent to him he would veto it. He would overlook it this time, but don't do it again. Another attempt at economy which went wrong was the elimination of the pension agencies by the house. The senate restored the agencies, and the two bodies twice disagreed on the item, but the house was finally forced to recede.

Despite the claim of Chairman Payne the actual figures show a slight increase in appropriations.

Everybody Happy.

Taken all in all, the session probably accomplished more work and made less noise than any of recent times. It is slyly hinted that the special elections in Massachusetts and New York threw the fear of God into the members and they decided it was high time to make good if they expected to get back. It is also just possible that the president's big stick had something to do with the result. However that may be, the miracle was accomplished, and the close of the session gave the country a gratifying example of what a congress can do when it buckles down to business. This was all the more a pleasant surprise for the reason that the first five months gave no promise of such an agreeable ending.

Congress accomplished little during these five months and gave no sign that it would ever mend its ways. Then came the landshakes in Massachusetts and New York and some mighty straight talk from the White House, after which there were evidences of repentance and a desire to lead a better life.

The country is glad of all this and still gladder, perhaps, that it is over. That is one of the good things about congress—the relief that is felt when it quits.

A BUSINESS TRAINING

The Methods That Are Used In the Schools of Germany.

CLASS ROOMS AS OFFICES.

The Pupils Are Divided Into Firms That Carry on an Imaginary Trade With Each Other—The Course From Office Boy to Director.

No one will deny the fact that Germans are among the keenest business men in the world. And undoubtedly one of the secrets of their success lies in the fact that in German schools boys are taught the practical details of business. The writer recently returned from Hamburg after a year's course of education, and an outline of the system of training boys in business may be interesting.

On my first day's attendance I was handed a time table on which appeared, set out in formidable array, such subjects as commercial correspondence, laws of bills of exchange, currency, political economy and commercial law, none of which at the time seemed much to me and raised serious doubts in my mind as to whether I should be able to understand and appreciate what appeared to be most abstruse subjects.

At 9 a. m. sharp on the following day the course began, prefaced by a couple of hours' hard study, for the Germans are gluttons to work and think nothing of a twelve hour day. The first course was called "business training." We worked in two spacious rooms furnished as offices, each room representing a different business house. These two firms carried on an imaginary trade with each other, and the routine adhered to was modeled exactly on the lines of a first class business establishment.

Each firm had a director, and these two were the most eminent students in the academy. They had subject to their management and control a complete staff of correspondents, shorthand writers, typists, bookkeepers, etc. The whole was supervised by a master, to whom reference was made in case of dispute or difficulty.

On making my appearance I was informed that my services were in request as an office boy. I was somewhat taken back, not to say a little humiliated, by the lowly position assigned to me, and I gave the master to understand that I considered I was qualified to occupy a much better post than that which he had chosen for me. He did not seem in the least perturbed by my remarks, but said: "You have already made a mistake—a mistake of diplomacy. One of the great maxims of business as taught here is to do what you are told, to do it at once and do it well."

With that he handed me a pile of envelopes and a long list of addresses and told me to set to work addressing them. I did so, but not with a very good grace, the master coming round from time to time to inspect my work. For two solid hours I plodded on until 11 a. m., when the course came to an end. Then I took the opportunity of going up to the master again and asking him if he did not really think I had been wasting my time in what I had been doing.

"Not in the least," said he. "In everything, no matter how simple or how difficult, there is always a good deal to learn. If you have paid attention while you were working you will have learned something about the geography of the German empire, for each address contains the name of some important town and province in which it is situated and the name of some firm celebrated for some particular class of goods."

This gave me food for reflection. As a matter of fact, I had not paid the least attention to what I had been writing; consequently I had failed to derive the benefit which it was the master's intention I should obtain from what seemed to me at the outset a most senseless task. On the following day I resolved to follow out the master's instructions to the letter, and I was surprised to find how interesting the work became.

I continued addressing envelopes for two hours a day for a whole week, and the next week I received promotion. In this way I went through the whole routine, from office boy to director, and the experience which I obtained in the various capacities has proved invaluable to me in business.

As director I had to sign checks, dictate letters, enter into agreements with the other firm with reference to the sale and purchase of goods, keep an eye on the money market, work out arbitrage calculations, draw up and endorse bills of exchange and bills of lading, make out periodical statements of affairs, allow or dispute amounts placed to the debit of the firm on account of general average losses and generally supervise everything.

While we were thus drilled in practical work the theoretical side of business was not neglected. Lectures were given at fixed hours, bookkeeping and mercantile law. Thus we enjoyed the inestimable advantage of acquiring the theory and practice of business at the same time.—Detroit Free Press.

Foley's Kidney Remedy will cure any case of kidney and bladder trouble not beyond the reach of medicine. No medicine can do more.
