Even the president's Winona speech couldn't save Tanney.

The supreme question in the state campaign is this: Shall the people of Nebraska surrender political power in to the keeping of the liquor trust?—Pawnee Republican.

While the election of Aldrich would not necessarily mean county option it would mean that a county option bill would be signed if it was passed. On the other hand, while the election of Dahlman might, through his exercise of the veto power, defeat county option even if it were to pass the legislature the result would probably react later in favor of state-wide prohibition. County optionists, including those who favor license regulation, will see the wisdom in supporting Aldrich.—Wayne Herald.
