YANKEE DEFENDER APPEARS

Congressman Hill Will Fight Disparagers of New England.
If any person walking this earth and more particularly these United States—considers "Connecticut Yankee" a term of opprobrium he had better not voice it too contemptuously unless he welcomes physical chastisement. Particularly is this true if the critic is in the immediate vicinity of Congressman Ebenezer J. Hill of Norwalk, Conn., who is emblazoned in the Congressional Record as the champion of New England white settlers.

CONGRESSMAN EBENEZER J. HILL.

The trouble came up in the national house of representatives recently over J. P. Rowell, son of the mayor of Stamford, Conn., who went to Oklahoma for his health, married a Klona squaw for happiness and then laid claim like a good Connecticut Yankee for the profit accruing from an allotment of valuable land on the ground of being an adopted Indian.

The repealing of Mr. Rowell's allotment was under consideration when Representative Henry A. Cooper of Wisconsin aroused the storm by remarking: "The house should not stand for being imposed upon by this Connecticut Yankee." Then he left the chamber.

Whereupon Representative Hill arose in his wrath and proclaimed the merit of the Yankee race for all time to come.

"The gentleman from Wisconsin," shouted Mr. Hill, "has fired his gun and fled. But I want to say that I am a Connecticut Yankee, with 250 years of my fine ancestors behind me as can be found anywhere, and I am proud of it. During the war with Spain northerners and southerners fought side by side in Cuba and Porto Rico, and they were all called 'Yanks.' They were proud of it too. The gentleman from Wisconsin if he had a little bit of Connecticut Yankee blood in his veins would be a good statesman."

Incidentally the house decided to let Mr. Rowell remain an Indian if he wanted to, but took the land away from him.

MAGYAR LEADER FOR PEACE.

Count Albert Apponyi to Tour the United States.
A winter visitor to the United States will be Count Albert Apponyi of Hungary, who will tour the United States and deliver addresses under the auspices of the American Peace society.

Though admittedly the leading statesman of Hungary and a holder of cabinet positions at various times as well as the presidency of the Hungarian chamber of deputies, he has failed in his great ambition, the premiership because he has not gained the confidence of Emperor Francis Joseph. He has frequently opposed the emperor's policies vigorously, but notwithstanding has retained the royal favor minus his political confidence.

COUNT ALBERT APPONYI.

Count Apponyi is considered one of the most finished orators in all Europe, and he speaks English, among other languages, perfectly. He is a brother-in-law of Count Mensdorff, the Austrian ambassador at London, and also of Prince Hugo Dietrichstein.

This will not be Count Apponyi's first visit to America, as he was here some seven years ago at the head of the parliamentary delegation from Hungary at the international parliamentary congress held at the St. Louis exposition.

A BRILLIANT FOP.

The Youthful Disraeli, Elegant and Eloquent.

AN INTELLECTUAL EXQUISITE.

His Airs and Graces, His Frills and Laces and His Dazzling Oratory in His Early Political Battles—A Pen Picture of His Remarkable Face.

Benjamin Disraeli's career in practical politics began with a series of reverses that might have discouraged a less persistent fighter. Five times the youthful novelist and versatile budding statesman attempted to break into parliament before he succeeded in winning an election, going down to defeat three times at Wycombe and once at Taunton.

In William Playfelle Monypenny's "Life of Benjamin Disraeli" the author declares that tales are still told in Wycombe of Disraeli's famous first speech from the portico of the Red Lion:

"The youthful orator was now at the height of his dandyism, and his curls and ruffles played no small part in the election. Standing on the top of the porch beside the figure of the lion, with his pale face set off by masses of jet black hair and his person plentifully adorned with lace and cambric, he must have seemed to the spectators better fitted for his role of fashionable novelist than for that of strenuous politician. Great, then, was their surprise when this 'popinjay,' as a hostile newspaper called him, began to pour forth a torrent of eloquence with tremendous energy of action and in a voice that carried far along the High street. He had an instinct for the dramatic effects which hold the attention of the mob. 'When the poll is declared I shall be there,' he exclaimed, according to a Wycombe tradition, pointing to the head of the lion, 'and my opponent will be there,' pointing to the tail. By the admission even of the opposite party the speech was a complete success, and his popularity with the crowd was thenceforth assured."

As to the young orator's appearance at Taunton, Mr. Monypenny gathers these comments of an eyewitness from an almost forgotten book of that time: "Never in my life had I been so struck by a face as I was by that of Disraeli. It was lividly pale, and from beneath two finely arched eyebrows blazed out a pair of intensely black eyes. I never have seen such orbs in mortal sockets either before or since. His physiognomy was strictly Jewish. Over a broad, high forehead were ringlets of coal black, glossy hair, which, combed away from his right temple, fell in luxuriant clusters or bunches over his left cheek and ear, which it entirely concealed from view."

"There was a sort of half smile, half sneer playing about his beautifully formed mouth, the upper lip of which was curved as we see it in the portraits of Byron. He was very showily attired in a dark bottle green frock coat, a waistcoat of the most extravagant pattern, the front of which was almost covered with glittering chains, and in fancy pattern pantaloons. He wore a plain black stock, but no collar was visible. Altogether he was the most intellectual looking exquisite I had ever seen."

"He commenced in a lisping, lackadaisical tone of voice. He minced his phrases in apparently the most affected manner and while he was speaking placed his hands in all imaginable positions, not because he felt awkward and did not know, like a booby in a drawing room, where to put them, but apparently for the purpose of exhibiting to the best advantage the glittering rings which decked his white and taper fingers. Now he would place his thumbs in the armholes of his waistcoat and spread out his fingers on its flashing surface; then one set of digits would be released and he would lean affectedly on the table, supporting himself with his right hand; anon he would push aside the curls from his forehead."

"But as he proceeded all traces of dandyism and affectation were lost. With a rapidity of utterance perfectly astonishing he referred to past events and indulged in anticipations of the future. The Whigs were, of course, the objects of his unsparing satire, and his eloquent denunciations of them were applauded to the echo. In all he said he proved himself to be the finished orator. Every period was rounded with the utmost elegance, and in his most daring flights, when one trembled lest he should fall from the giddy height to which he had attained, he so gracefully descended that every hearer was wrapped in admiring surprise. His voice, at first so finical, gradually became full, musical and sonorous and with every varying sentiment was beautifully modulated. His arms no longer appeared to be exhibited for show, but he exemplified the eloquence of the hand. The dandy was transformed into the man of mind, the Mantalini looking personage into a practiced orator and finished elocutionist."

Her Declaration.
"Have you anything to declare?" asked the customs inspector.
"Yes," replied the lady who was returning from Europe. "I unhesitatingly declare that it is an outrage the way this government permits things to be mugged up in one's trunk."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Let those who complain of having to work undertake to do nothing. If this does not convert them nothing will.

Twenty years ago the people of our country ate in one year one hog for every person. Ten years ago—sevenths of a hog, and last year one-half of one hog per capita. With the rapidly increasing population of the United States is an over production of pork probable for some time to come? The swine breeders program at the Organized Agricultural meetings, January 18, 1911, at Lincoln, will be exceptionally strong this year.
