The Cake That Billy Bought

A Valentine Story

By MARTHA J. TOWNE

The door of the Woman's Exchange swung open and closed behind Billy Delwin's broad back. For an instant he hesitated, besieged by a battery of feminine eyes. Then he strode forward to the counter, where under glass cases were arranged nandsome and toothsome cakes of every description and variety.

With his hat under his arm he stared down at the cakes with a calculating eye. "I want a plum cake," he said finally. "Have you got one today?"

"Wait a minute." And the woman disappeared, presently returning with a large box, which she opened and disclosed under tissue paper wrap-Georgie Short left for California pings a huge round cake.

Billy's eyes sparkled dangerously as he surveyed the beautiful cake. "I'!! take it," he said quickly. Then he added a question, "Is it plum cake?"

"Yes, indeed, and perfectly delicious," said the woman enthusiasti-Then it was that he summoned cour-

The cash register clanged noisily as the woman turned away. "Against the rules," she said crisply.

"May I inquire," persisted Billy hesitatingly, his voice still lower, "if this cake was baked-er-er-by an old lady?"

The attendant smiled shrewdly over her shoulder. "It's against the rules Once in the street he boarded a car and was conveyed with more or less rapidity to his bachelor rooms. He took the cake from its box. "I dunno. That's more like it than any of 'em," he muttered as he went to and fro, hastily removing the things from his library table. Then he laid several clean white towels on the polished surface and, bringing from vari-

"Looks like a cake sale," he grinned somewhat anxiously. "I hope none of I'm all off if they see this layout; but, by George, I'll find her if it takes the rest of my life!"

He walked around the table, surveying its toothsome burden with a critical eye. Of all the cakes he decided that his last purchase was the handsomest, the lightest and the most deliciously fragrant.

"Now for a taste," he said, plunging a silver knife in the first one. The slice was clean and yellow and full of currants. Billy wrinkled his nose disdainfully and laid down the slice.

"Phyllis never made that one," he commented. "Her cakes always have raisins in. Now for the next one!" One after another he tried the different cakes, sniffing, tasting, examining and shaking his head dubiously after each operation.

At last he came to his latest purchase, the Valentine cake, and if one watched him closely they might have observed that his cheeks paled and his firm lips were compressed into straight colorless lines. Suddenly he grouned and laid down the knife.

"If this one shouldn't be hers!" he muttered desperately, and then, wian upward fling of his hand ome head he plunged the builte into the cake near its edge, careful not to disturb the diorations that otherwed the top. "I've found her! I've found her at last!" he cried exultantly. "Nobody in the world ever baked that cake except Phyllis Giles! She made one last year for her Valentine party-same size, same flavor, same decoration-and you can't fool me, sir!"

He turned the cake slowly around and viewed it from all sides. "Her when I made it, and I splashed so hands made it, she touched it, and she | many tears over the little red hearts placed all those little hard red hearts that they bled, and I had to replace about the edge, and not one of those them with others. If nothing had happened or if Phyllis had not hidden away after it was over we should have been married by this time instead of my following up the only clew I ever could get-that she had come to New York and was baking cakes for the Woman's Exchange! I've bought plum cakes from every exchange in the city, I believe, until the women look on me with suspicion." He sat for a long time in silence, and then he arose and bundled the cakes into their boxes. The last purchase he wrapped carefully and replaced in its box. Then he got into his overcoat, picked up his hat and with the cake under his arm he sought the street. Presently he was once more standing before the counter in the Woman's Exchange.

"I wonder," she muttered softly-"I wonder if it would have done any harm to have told him; he had a the chaps happen in. Billy Delwin was beside her in an instant.

"Phyllis!" he cried sharply. "I've got you now, and you can't lose me again!"

She uttered a little frightened cry and turned a white face up to his. "Oh, Billy, Billy!" she gasped. "Where did you come from?" "I just came out of this exchange, where the hearts of the attendants are harder than the little red hearts on your Valentine plum cake, for they would not divulge your address, though I begged almost on my knees. But I've got you now, Phyllis Giles! Don't you dare enter that ogre's den again!"

He drew her trembling form close to him, and they stood in the shadow of the doorway, her slight form leaning against him. "How did you know, Billy? How did you find me out?" asked Phyllis after a little silence. Billy told her of his quest for the cakes, of the slight clew he had followed and of his purchase that night of the Valentine plum cake, which he recognized as her handiwork, "Darling," he whispered after it had been told, "tomorrow is St. Valentine's day. You have baked this cake, and on it you have asked the question, 'Wili you be my valentine?' Now, I bought that cake and take it upon myself to answer that question. I will be your valentine under one condition."

"What is that?" asked Phyllis. "That you will admit that you're not sorry that I bought the cake."

"Sorry!" echoed Phyllis joyfully. "Why, Billy, I was thinking of you hearts is harder than Phyllis' own thought you'd never come!"

The Worth of a Chinese Royal Gift to Li Hung Chang. The late empress downger of China was something of a humorist. The author of "Behind the Scenes In Pe king" tells a story of how Li Hung Chang, after concluding the treaty of Shimonoseki, was presented by the empress with a cloth of gold bag con taining some heavy article. The treas ure turned out to be a large vase, and Li, who was an enthusiastic collector of Chinese ceramics, at once sent for his secretary, Mr. Pethick, to come and examine the new acquisition.

Some time was spent in a careful examination to determine the dynasty during which this treasure was produced, but the date of this especial paste was lost, with its other technical classifications. After a long time Mr. Pethick lifted it gingerly, placed it on a table, put himself in front of it. The tea tables were empty now, and drawing a wrap round his shoulders. and slowly, very slowly, held his hands up to it, turning them in the
