TRUTH TRIUMPHS.

McCook Citizens Testify for the Public Benefit.

A truthful statement of a McCook citizen, given in his own words, should convince the most skeptical about the merits of Doan's Kidney Pills. If you suffer from backache, nervousness, sleeplessness, urinary disorders or any form of kidney ills, the cure is at hand. Read this:

Charles Weintz of McCook, N. D., says: "My back ached constantly as if I lifted or stooped, I had sharp pains in my loins. The secretions from my kidneys often contained sediment and the passage were irregular and painful. A tired feeling was in evidence when I got up in the morning, convincing me that my kidneys were at fault. After trying a number of remedies without being helped to any extent, I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at McConnell's drug store and they entirely removed my trouble. I have since advised other kidney sufferers to take this preparation and in every instance it had done good work. Several years ago I publicly endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills and at this time, I gladly do so again."

The Buck Surveying Party. Sometime during the month of July or August... 1869, a surveying party under the direction of Nelson Buck of Pontiac, Illinois, consisting of eleven or twelve men, disappeared on the plains of Southwestern Nebraska. While nothing was seen of the party after it left the vicinity of Fort Kearney, investigations made in the fall of 1869 leave no room for doubt that the party was killed by the Indians. The event is of especial interest to residents of Red Willow county, because it has been definitely determined that the massacre occurred in this county, probably on Beaver creek, a short distance west of where the town of Marion now is. Mr. H. B. MacGregor, who was originally one of the party, but who was sent back to the Fort after they had gone into the field, is, so far as is known, the only survivor. The following account of his adventures, written by himself, was recently received:

In the spring of 1869 six of us were enlisted by Mr. Buck to accompany him on a government surveying expedition into Nebraska, then a newly created state. They were Lycurgus Perry, John Nettleton, James Sager, David McFarland, H. B. MacGregor and Frank McCulloch. Lycurgus Perry finally declined to go, but the rest of us started on the day set, in charge of Mr. Buck. We were all young men, all under age, and without the faintest ideas of the service we were undertaking, but looked upon it as a sort of a prolonged picnic. We traveled by rail to Chicago, and from there to Council Bluffs, Iowa. Then we followed the river down until opposite Plattsmouth, Nebraska. Here I came upon the first Indians I saw, camped in the brush. I was told they were Omahas and harmless. Certainly they paid no attention to us.

We crossed over to Plattsmouth on a ferry boat by pulling a rope. I do not know what they charged, but it was considerable for an outfit like ours. Arriving in Plattsmouth, we camped out and were there for some time. Mr. Buck renewed his supplies there, gathered information, and recruited six other young fellows and a teamster. I regret I cannot, after this lapse of time, recall any of their names, although I can still recall their faces, equipment, etc., except the teamster, who was a tough looking, green eyed, curly headed, Polish Jew by the name of Levy Mieroslawski. We were still in Plattsmouth July 4th. I remember the celebration there on that day, and the driving of the first spike in the construction of the Burlington railroad, which I witnessed on that day.

We were in Plattsmouth possibly two weeks, but in due time started west over what was called the old government trail, passing what was then Grand Island, on the south side of the Platte, a collection of half a dozen or more sod houses. I recall the people there were very bitter toward all Indians. One old lady where I bought a little milk boasted that she had finished seven of the red devils by putting arsenic in the sugar and letting them steal it while she was absent, and their equipments were on the walls, too, to prove her story.

The trip from Lincoln to Fort Kearney reservation was uneventful, except for the fact that Mr. Buck could not locate a parallel which another crew had run and from which we were supposed to start. For that reason, and to renew supplies, and to make requisition for arms and an escort, we camped at the reservation. I do not recall just how long we remained, but I know Major Pollock, who was in command of the post and other officers, and even enlisted men, insisted, if we went on without an escort and poorly armed as we were, we would all be massacred. The days went by, but with no escort, no arms and no news. Finally, we started as we were. After about three days' travel we pitched camp near the Republican, in what, as near as I can tell, is now Red Willow county, and prepared to run a parallel. Mr. Buck called Nettleton and myself to his tent and told us he was afraid there was considerable danger, and he wanted us to return to Fort Kearney reservation and await the requisition for arms and an escort, and come back with them to this camp. We found our way back to the fort readily enough, and reported to the commanding officer. Nettleton had no money, and I only three dollars, half of which I gave him. He hired out that same day to the man who was running an ox ferry across the Platte from Kearney City to Fort Kearney, getting three dollars for each trip. Nettleton agreed to come down to the bank of the Platte the next morning and talk across with me, but he did not, and I never saw him again.

I received every attention from the commanding officer of the post, and in a day or so he told me I could get a job from the post trader if I wanted it, hauling wood into the post by ox team from Plum Creek crossing, two trips a week. I had never driven oxen, but claimed I had, and got the job. I did not know how to yoke them up, but the morning we were to start I told the young man who was going with me the truth about it, and told him if he would show me how this one morning I could do it and could drive all right, I was sure. This he did, being a good fellow. His name, I regret to say, has escaped me, but we got along all right for a number of trips. I learned long afterwards that it was a most dangerous job, the Sioux using that crossing and killing nearly every wood hauler who had tried it. We did not see an Indian, though we heard them often at night as we laid hid near the crossing.

Evans Brothers of St. Louis came along there soon, and as I heard nothing from my companions, and nothing as to an escort or arms, and they were going west, I hired to Evans as a rider at one dollar a day and found. This was a large and well equipped outfit. There were a number of well known western men with this crew as scouts. I remained with this cattle outfit until they reached the foothills, when I quit them and started back alone and on foot for home. I had no serious trouble. I slept at night on the islands in the Platte, and traveled days. I often heard Indians and gun shots, but did not see one nor was I seen by them on this trip.

When opposite North Platte I swam over to the north side, and there found some parties with three mule teams going east. They were without a driver for one of the teams and I took that job for the transportation. I quit them at Columbus, Nebraska, and from there on home nothing of especial interest occurred.

THE WRONG NUMBER

You didn't look in the Directory before you called a number—the wrong bell was rung and an innocent subscriber was disturbed. You said "Central" gave me the wrong number."

Of course she did. You called the wrong number—why shouldn't you get it?

Another time you thoughtlessly called a wrong number. The next moment you remembered that it was not the one you wanted. You quickly signaled "Central" and asked for the right number.

Meanwhile, the party of the number you first called answered when his bell rang. He got no reply. He angrily exclaimed, "My bell rang." He did not know you called him and then decided you wanted another number after "Central" had rung his line.

The Telephone Company received the blame for your carelessness.
