Average Is Increased.

The Burlington's report says that after the snow melted, the sun and strong winds tended to form a hard crust on the fields. In most cases the fields have been harrowed and the crust broken. And taking into account the damage done after the snow disappeared, the winter wheat crop starts the season with a prospect of 80 per cent of the maximum. The average is put down as being much larger than in former years.
A general rain fell last week over most of the grain raising area of Nebraska and it is predicted that if rains occur and seasonable weather prevails, the crop prospects will be up to 100 per cent within the next year.—Omaha Bee.

Smart Feature of the Season.

To the woman who cannot keep in step with the ever-changing Madam Fashion, a model that bids well to be popular for several seasons, is indeed a point not to be overlooked—so note this illustration. The smart revers have taken a strong hold on fashionable women, for the very reason that it is original. It is a different form of the bertha and has never before been worn, therefore you need not fear that it is a fleeting style. Black satin—the soft, flexible texture, not the stiff, crackling kind of years ago, is a material that never loses caste, and when choosing your style, select wisely. I am speaking to you who spend time and thought over the problem. A gown of shimmering, black satin may be worn for seasons and yet look striking; perhaps, you will have to add new lace to freshen it up, but that is all.

Notice the puff of lace at the sleeve which adds a distinctive charm to this fetching gown, and which is attached to the cuff and not to any underwaist as might be imagined. The V neck which is the smart cut of the season may be filled in with a chemise of flesh colored net, shadow or rust lace. A little band of ribbon around the V and cuffs would harmonize pleasingly with the other dominant feature.

The skirt is six gored and was designed to accentuate the fashionable silhouette, all the lines tending to give length. The tunic effect is another feature that is decidedly advantageous to this distinctive model which is within the scope of any amateur dressmaker, as it is not difficult to construct.
