There have been lots of traveling men in town this week. They are only the vanguard, however, that will happen along this way as the spring trade opens up.

Early Tuesday evening a drizzling rain began to descend and proceed to freeze as it fell. The next morning all nature was robed in garments of ice and presented a weirdly beautiful spectacle, the only thing that was not weirdly beautiful being the man who carefully felt his way along the icy walks in the gray light in the early morning. The branches of the trees were heavy with their icy burden and the telephone wires looked like giant guitar strings. It was not very cold but exceedingly disagreeable just the same. Considerable damage to trees and telephone wires was reported.

A long Missouri Pacific freight train broke in two Monday night while coming over the Freeling hill. Half of the train was on the up grade and half on the down grade, when the break occurred. When this city was reached the engine returned for the missing cars.
