THE DYING CHILD. POUGEON.

I'm weary tonight, darling mother draw near me,
I feel that my hours in our home will be few:
And soon will I sing with the pure, white robed angels,
But, mother dear, surely I'll tell them of you.

Don't weep darling mother, because I am going
To the faraway land of the joyous and blest;
For I'll tell the dear Saviour that some day your coming,
And I'll ask Him to save you a sweet place to rest.

For I'm sure that He loves you as I do, dear mother,
Because you have always been good, kind and true:
And some day when you have completed your labors,
Heaven's gates will be open to welcome you, too.

So do not be weeping because of our parting,
Dear mother 'tis certain that we'll meet again;
And though death seems cruel in taking me from you
'Tis best, for it frees me from all earthly pain.

Good-bye, darling mother, please hold my hand tightly;
Even now do I hear the sweet songs from on high:
Mother! Kiss me! Your darling is going to leave you:
But we'll meet again in our home in the sky.
