A Little Light

Coal is often productive of considerable heat—when it will do the most good. Telling you that our coal is better than other coal does not make it so, but our willingness to warrant its lasting longer and giving more heat than coal for which you pay the same money elsewhere ought to have some weight with the man who does his own thinking.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mettz returned to Newkirk, Oklahoma after a ten day's visit in Falls City.

Nobody ever suspicioned that E. H. Towle was more than successful business man. If the re-campaign hasent proved him to be one of the shrewdest politicians in the city we don't want a cent.

Any one who witnessed the activity of Joe Miles in the municipal campaign must have wondered where the News heard its "ugly rumors" about the deal between this paper and the local telephone Company.

Sometimes things are not what they seem: a Falls City young lady was conversing with her fiance a Mr. Rose, and in the conversation related the fact that one of her lady friends was trying her hand at raising chickens. "I don't think that I would enjoy that", continued the young lady all unconscious, "I would much prefer raising roses". The young man is still wondering.

war department in an important capacity several years ago. He became prominent though a brief written for the use of the senate in its disposition of our insular possessions. Now the President has appointed him governor of the Panama canal zone at a salary of $17,500, board, keep, house rent and traveling expenses.

Magoon was not considered much of a lawyer in Lincoln, but events often prove that "you never can tell till you try."

Russell Sage In Retirement.

The announcement of the retirement of Russell Sage from Wall street at the age of 88 must arouse curiosity as to his plans for the remaining month or years of his life. "What can he do with himself now that he can no longer read the long tape as it is thrown off by ticker? What has he left to live for?"

Beginning the engrossing task of earning a living as an errand boy in his brother's store in Troy he has gone on with an increasing devotion to business. In his early years he found time to serve as Alderman and Member of Congress. But since his removal to New York, forty years ago he has no hours to waste on such foolishness. All of his energies have been centered on the Stock Exchange. He has thought and done nothing but business. He has taken up no avocation for his leisure, because he has had no leisure. Vacations, he asserted in a recent magazine article, were from the devil. He has not had one in thirty years.

Darwin confessed with grief in his later years that he had lost his power of enjoying music and poetry. Russell Sage could make a far more sweeping confession with the additional difference that he would see no reason to grieve over his atrophied life. He has had no interest in any of the arts or in out-of-door sports' With a frankness which is refreshing he has expressed his contempt for the wealthy men who dissipate their millions in philanthropic or charitable enterprises. By a long and severe course of training he has made of himself a mere business machine a human cash register.

He has cut himself off from all the important plase of life save one, just as surely as if he had spent his years in exile in a Siberian mine. The woe pronounced by Isaiah against them that join house to house, that lay field to field till there be no place that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth, has been visited upon this narrow-minded millionaire though he may be unconscious of the fact. The penalty of such a career lies in the the withered life which is its fruit. And unlike the sentence of the law, this punishment by nature can never be evaded. K. C. Star.
