Emerson says that man pays dearly for a small prodigality or words that mean the same. That is to say that while we travel life's journey the path is made rougher and harder from our small denials and savings. This will cost you something we admit but your doing without it will cost you very much more. You are living this life but once and this will comfort many a quiet hour. A man is most wise that, within his means, gets the most out of life, not he who leaves the most behind him.
