Concerning a Man who Made Good

William A. Margrave whose death was recorded in this paper last week was one of Richardson county's remarkable men. By most people it was supposed that he lived in Brown county, Kans., but such was not the case. For several years his residence was just a little north of the state line in Richardson county.

Mr. Margrave possessed some of the attributes of greatness. His was a strong rugged character that overcame obstacles and never repined at hardship. I think I never knew a more courageous man than he, nor one in whose judgment I had more confidence. He was maligned by some, for jealousy is the tribute paid by mediocrity to ability. But in the years I have known him I never knew him to take an unfair advantage of anyone. He despised a cheat and a liar with all the hatred that a big man has for little things. He believed all of his business associates to be honest and would not have their integrity questioned. If, however, a man deceived him, he at once severed all relations with him and under no circumstances would resume them. He always put it up to the man to prove his worth and determined the issue upon what the man did and not what gossips might say.

Mr. Margrave was born in Peoria, Illinois, 61 years ago. He moved to this country with his parents early in life and spent his boyhood on the bottoms near Salem and near Troy, Kansas. His ambition was manifest in early life. The chief articles in his creed were to keep all business obligations sacred and never to believe ill of a man until the man had proved the charge by his own conduct. He worked for Anderson Miller as a farm hand for $15 a month, and worked with Stephen Prior, the drayman, for a long time for the same remuneration. He was always a strictly sober man and had an abhorrence of liquor. A gentleman who is worth his thousands told me the day of the funeral that at one time Margrave came to him when he needed the advice of a friend and in a kindly way remonstrated with him for drinking too much. Through that conversation and the encouragement that followed this man had ceased drinking. Notwithstanding the day of the funeral was hot and dusty and the place of the funeral was many miles from the home of my informant, his whole family was there to pay their respects to this quiet, unassuming gentleman who had done so much for them.

An instance of the way the deceased regarded a business obligation was told me by another gentleman. During the panic of 1893 Mr. Margrave owed the institution with which the relator was connected many thousands of dollars, for one who does business on the large scale that he did necessarily has indebtedness. He went to those from whom he had borrowed the money and said, "things are getting a little tight and while I will have to sell my livestock at withering prices to pay what I owe you, still when you feel that you want your money, let me know." A short time after that they sent for Margrave and said, "we have a number of small borrowers whose loans we can call but it will hurt them worse than it will you and we must have a part of the money from you." Without a word of complaint, without getting angry as a smaller man would have done, he went to the depot and began telegraphing for cars. In a few days he was shipping stock by the wholesale, selling it for prices that lost him thousands of dollars, but he paid his obligations in full within three weeks. "That," said my informant, "put the credit of Mr. Margrave on a foundation from which nothing could displace it."

An instance of his business judgment and courage is connected with the same transaction. Shortly after selling his stuff he concluded that the panic was about over and that cattle were at the lowest possible price. Notwithstanding everybody was frightened and holding on to his money like grim death, Margrave borrowed an immense sum of money, bought cattle, fed them as the price soared and the panic disappeared, and in the end made twice as much as he had sacrificed to keep his credit good.

In early life Margrave married an Indian girl at the mission school and a more beautiful character is hard to find than Mrs. Margrave. The four children have been reared with the utmost care. They have been splendidly educated. The home is filled with good books, magazines and daily papers, for all of the family are great readers of the best literature. Those who know and are capable of judging say that the home life of this family has been ideal. No man, no matter what his color, has ever been turned from this house hungry. The writer knows of his own knowledge of many poor families who have been almost supported for years by the dead man and his good wife. These are the things of which he never spoke. If you learned it at all it would come to you through some other source, never through those whose charity was so abundant.

For a year or so trouble had been casting its shadow over Mr. Margrave, trouble for which he was in no wise responsible. He was meeting it with a courage that at times astounded me. Fortunately the misunderstanding was cleared up a few months ago and that which he dreaded but did not fear was removed forever. He came to Falls City a week ago last Saturday to close the matter up. After the last tangled end was tied and the incident closed he said to me, "we have both worked pretty hard on this thing and we ought to take a rest." So we determined to go out to his ranch in the west on September 1st and hunt chickens. He was to take his little grandson and I was to take my little boy. Nearly all of the afternoon we talked and laid our plans. Down at the school house corner a visitor was awaiting him as he talked, but death is always patient and bides his time, and death waited to keep this appointment even as it awaits upon you and me. The last time I saw him was as he waved his hand to me as he drove towards eternity, and so driving he passed out of my life.

I am glad that I knew William A. Margrave, a man who made good. He taught me many things all of which were of good report. He was one of the strongest men I have known. His greatest accomplishment was not the broad fields and countless herds he left surviving him, rather was it the many charities of which the world knew nothing; rather was it the sincerity of his nature, his belief in his fellow man. Those who knew him best are his true mourners for they knew him as he was.

His unexpected and seemingly untimely death, calls to my mind the following verses which have been going the rounds of the press.

IF WE HAD BUT A DAY.
We should fill the hours with the sweetest things,
If we had but a day;
We should drink alone at the purest springs
In our upward way;
We should love with a lifetime's love in an hour,
If the hours were few;
We should rest, not for dreams, but for fresher power
To be and to do.
We should guide our wayward or wearied wills
By the clearest light;
We should keep our eyes on the heavenly hills,
If they lay in sight;
We should trample the pride and the discontent
Beneath our feet;
We should take whatever a good God sent,
With a trust complete.
We should waste no moments in weak regret;
If the day were but one;
If what we remember and what we forget
Went out with the sun;
We should be from our clamorous selves set free,
To work or to pray,
And to be what the Father would have us be,
If we had but a day.

A Tennial Beatitude.

Blessed be neighbors, for they shall take care of thy children when thou art busy; they shall bring in their choice recipes for preserves and jam; they shall tell thee when thy horse is in someone's corn before the owner of the field discovereth it; they shall invite thee to their cyclone cellar in time of storm; they shall lend thee of their dishes and furniture in time of visitors; they shall be on hand to help thee in time of the visitation of the stork; they shall care for thee in time of sickness and they shall give thee to eat from the choice viands of their table. Remember that beatitude and lend not thy hand to Satan who delighteth in a neighborhood row.—Ralph Tennial.

Market Letter.

Stock yards, Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 6, 1906. Notwithstanding a decrease of 10,000 cattle last week, as compared with the week before, the market made only the nominal gain of 5 to 10 cents. Trade closed the week dull at that, but with a better clearance than at the end of the previous week, and killers also killed up closer, and therefore more likely to trade actively this week. The trouble with the market is the early appearance of unusual numbers of rangers at the Northern markets. They are also extra good quality 1200 to 1400 pounds, and come in competition with medium to good natives. Of course, this is a weakening influence here, although we got none of them. The supply today at all points is moderate, 11,000 head here, and the situation is stronger all round. Market is strong to 10 higher. Rains in the last day or two over certain dry districts have helped to keep down the supply today, by reviving the pastures therein. The same influence has been at work during a week or more in strengthening the demand for country grades of cattle. Supply of this class is still small, however, as branded cattle are scarce yet. Dry lot cattle are scarcer each week, a few last week at $6 to $6.10, balance of the dry lot cattle at $5.35 to $5.90, top today $5.90, heavy steers showing grass $5 to $5.40, straight grass steers $4.25 to $5 for the weighty kinds, light steers $3.25 to $4, medium to choice heifers $4 to $5.25, cows $2.50 to $3.75 mainly, bulls $2.15 to $3.50, canners $1.60 to $2.25, veals $3.75 to $5.50 stockers $2.25 to $3.75, feeders $3.40 to $4.35, stock cows and heifers $1.90 to $2.85.

Hog receipts exceeded 60,000 head last week, large run said to be due partly to many contract hogs being delivered at the end of July, besides the usual rush to market when a break occurs. Prices closed Saturday 10 cents above the lowest time, but 20 cts. below previous Saturday. Run is 7000 head today, with good light hogs, 190 to 180 pounds, selling at $6.35 to $6.40, price gradually lessening as weight increases or quality deteriorates down to $6.20 for medium to common packing or heavy weights. The supply last week was double that of corresponding week a year ago, during which week prices advanced 35 cents. Present prices are only 40 cents above a year ago.

Sheep supply was small last week at 18,000 head and there was little net change in values. Markets were called strong each day, but the week closed in about the same notch. Supply today is 4000 head, market steady, spring lambs selling at $6.85 to $7.50, yearlings $5.25 to $5.75, wethers $4.25 to $5.25, ewes for slaughter $4.60 to $5, breeding ewes $4.50 to $5.25, feeding wethers $4.60 to $4.85, feeding lambs $5.50 to $6.
