The Tribune for All Kinds Job Work

NOW AND THEN.

"I said once that I would never own irrigated land," said the man from Butte, Mont., but I now say that I wouldn't own any other kind." "The Almighty as a creator is all right," he continued, "but as a farmer I think there is room for improvement." The writer was riding through the fruit country south of North Yakima, Wash., with the Montana man to ascertain if possible why improved land in that far away country was selling for $2,000 an acre. The soil is a volcanic dust. It hasn't rained there for so long that the inhabitants have forgotten what a shower is. The roads are a foot deep in dust and the trees and hop vines are so dirty that their original color is buried from sight. The land is held in tracts from ten acres up to forty. A farm of forty acres is considered a very large farm. The unimproved land is a white and dazzling waste of sand, sage brush and cactus. It looks like thirty cents and sells for two hundred dollars an acre. Water rights go with the land and a years cultivation produces marvelous results. Six crops of alfalfa, apple trees bear profusely the fourth year. Hops produce a net revenue some years of $800 per acre. Fruit is the principle crop however, and the little city of North Yakima ships $6,000 cars of fruit annually.

When you hear of the wonderful fruit of Washington hereafter, just cross your fingers. In some respects it is wonderful, but in others it is very ordinary. The apples raised there are at least three times the size of our apples. The peaches are so huge that one can scarcely recognize the fruit. The plums, the prunes and the berries are proportionately as large. But just bite into them once. A peach that in appearance is beautiful will be as dry as a sponge and as tasteless as the dust from which it springs. I would rather have a Richardson County Johnathon apple that the most famed apple of the Yakima country. But at a fruit stand one buys apples for what they seem to be and not for what they are. Consequently the Washington apple will bring three times the price that our apples will. These people take care of their fruit too. There is much that we can learn from them. For instance, they spray their fruit until every worm and insect is destroyed. When the time comes for marketing they do not shovel into a wagon and hike to town, they pack their own fruit on their farms and sell it themselves to the eastern commission man. The apples are packed in half bushel boxes and every apple is wrapped in paper. The peaches are packed in peck boxes and carefully wrapped. Consequently the Washington fruit man receives thirty five cents a box for his peaches F. O. B. Yakima. I visited a fruit farm of thirty acres while they were packing the fruit. Over one hundred persons were wrapping and packing peaches and apples. From this thirty acres 34 car loads of fruit was harvested and shipped which netted the owner $750 per acre for his crop. He told me that he had spent about $1400 for spraying the thirty acres.

Many men are becoming rich in land speculation out there. The Montana man showed forty acres that he had bought two years ago for $120 per acre, he had sold thirty acres of it at an average of $475 per acre. A son of Ike Harris of Stella bought eighty acres of $60 per acre and after 18 months sold it for $160 per acre, the same land is now worth, or would sell for $300 per acre. Because of the profit these men are making and have made the land has gone to a prohibitive price and I would not advise an investment at this time.

Many Nebraska men are there looking the land over, some of whom made purchase while I was there. The land is too valuable to make alfalfa a profitable crop; the fruit and hop land alone can produce a reasonable interest on the investment. So far as a home is concerned, I wouldn't live in North Yakima unless the country would make it very profitable to make a home there. It is hot, beastly hot. It never rains, the dust is a foot deep and a wind storm is frightful. The soil being gravel and nigger heads, the irrigation water seeps into the cellars until they are half full from April to October. The city is never free from typhoid fever as a result. I counted twelve typhoid signs on one street.

The business interests in North Yakima are making money. The foreign capital that is flowing in there to buy land and make investments makes times good. The hop picking season is on and three thousand hop pickers, making an average of $2.00 per day and spending most of their earnings in this city. A girl about 15 years of age told me that she could make $2.00 a day packing fruit and hundreds of them find employment at such wages. The trouble is to get the labor, everybody in that country works, including Father. If there are poor people in North Yakima I didn't see them. Only sickness or some such misfortune could make a family poor, there is plenty of employment the year around.

The democratic Senatorial convention was held at Humboldt on Saturday and John Osborne of Pawnee county was made the nominee. In the beginning John was a candidate for office, and now that he is old he has not departed from the custom for during the intervening years he has had much practice.—Table Rock Argus.
