Poisoning Gophers.

An Iowa subscriber writes asking for a method of destroy ng pocket gophers, which are working freely in his meadow. The North Dakota Experiment Station issued a bulletin some time since on this subject, in which they recommended the following: "Bring a quart of vinegar to boiling, add one onnce of strychnine, stir with a stick until fully dissolved, then add six quarts of hot water, pour this on twenty pounds of wheat or corn and allow to stand for about eighteen hours, or until the solution is entirely absorbed. but the mass must be frequently stirred vigorously so that it will become uniformly saturated with the poison. The grain should now be spread out to dry where it cannot be reached by animals or children, for you have a highly poisoned grain. Now dissolve six pounds of sugar in six quarts of water and boil until one gallon remains, then allow to cool. When cold add a teaspoonful of anise oil, which can be had at any drug store. You now have a thick syrup which should be poured over the nearly dry poisoned grain and the whole stirred so as to cover each grain with a layer of syrup. Allow the grain to thoroughly dry, stir so as to prevent its sticking in a mass. The odor of anise on it is very attractive to the gopher and each kernel should contain enough poison to destroy one gopher. This sugar-coated grain can be used at any time. but care should be taken to prevent any poisoning of birds, or animals. A little of this grain buried near each gopher burrow will be pretty sure to attract and destroy its victim."

The United States Department of Agriculture also recommends strychnine prepared in practically the same way. In addition to poisoning with strychnine the department has recommended carbon bisulphide, where the conditions are fay. orable. That is, where the burrows are simple and the soil will be most satisfactory.
