

For Clear Brains

Clear brains for railroad work is the slogan now among all the railroads, and while these roads have inhibited the use of liquor among their employes while on duty, the Lehigh Valley railroad goes one step farther and notified its employes that they must refrain from the use of liquor at all times or quit the service of the company.

This demand for total abstinence is the first to issue from such a source and is an example likely to be followed by other railroads.

Common sense is coming rapidly to settle the liquor question. The man who spends his "off hours" in his cups has of necessity weakened nerves and a more or less befogged brain and cannot render his best service, whatever his line of work.

And the day is near when all corporations and business enterprises which require keen minds and clear brains to run them will make this same demand for totalism among their employes.

Not many years ago liquor drinking was far more prevalent than it is today, among the working classes. Times have changed and drunkenness has been vastly reduced. The habitual drinker today has no place in the workshop, store, office or elsewhere. The drunkard is shunned and has a small part in the work of the world. The keen competition of modern life has had a perceptible effect upon the drink habit. It requires clear heads and steady nerves to combat this competition and bring success, and success is becoming increasingly desirable. Truly the United States is becoming a sober nation, and that end is being accomplished by a far more effective means than legislation. As long as sobriety is one of the means to success sobriety will increase and the temperance question will readily approach its sure solution.—Ex.

Don't Be Hysterical.

The administration of President Roosevelt, ushered in by an advocacy of a "trust-busting" policy, has to a great extent gained its end by unmasking of corporation abuses, and curbing piratical corporations. But the people have gone further until all corporations, whether honest and beneficial, or other, are being condemned.

James McKeon, of New York, who assisted Governor Hughes as counsel for the Armstrong commission which recently investigated the big life insurance companies in New York, said in an address the other day: "Only through corporations can the man of small means compete with 'swollen fortunes,' and yet the people themselves are endangering their own savior by their hysterical attacks against corporations. I, myself, engaged in a reconstructive work with the insurance companies, but I am now endeavoring to eradicate the evils which resulted from the investigation of last year."

In fact, the present state of public opinion toward corporations is fast becoming an unreasoning mania. Regulation is right and proper, but it should be fair, and not of a kind to injure the welfare of the country for the faint hope of punishing those who already have enough.

Think it over. Don't be hysterical. Try to look at both sides of the corporation question, and they can probably be "regulated" without detriment to themselves and the country.—Atchison Globe.

From reports of current sales, it is evident that our prediction of high prices for bred sows is being outstripped. The demand is the best ever known—so say the breeders. It could not be otherwise at the prevailing high prices for pork and the scarcity of stock and breeding hogs in the corn belt states. Last spring was a disastrous one to young pigs, and nearly every farmer was caught for a portion or well nigh all of his crop of March and early April pigs. Then the cholera came on in the later months and took another fatal swipe at the herds. So the paucity of hogs is easily accounted for, and in turn the strong prices for the bred sows. Yet some of the breeders are getting to expect much. The writer was at a sale recently where the average was around $70 per head, and many of those in attendance thought it an unprofitable sale to the seller. If it was so, then that breeder bought his breeding stock at too high prices. Even at $70 per head the range of prices is well nigh beyond the range of the man who raises hogs for market purposes only, and we maintain that the breeders who can depend on breeders for their entire support are about one per cent of all those engaged in the business. Hence it is better to encourage a demand amongst the farmers in one's own locality and by so doing be assured of a perpetual demand for one's stock. When a boom is on and the bubble bursts the one to be affected is the breeder who has held himself up through reciprocal relations with other breeders and at the same time has drawn his local trade from the field. Let merit be the governing factor in prices and the business will be kept in safe channels. At the same time the demand amongst farmers and stockmen will be stimulated and much more satisfactory will be the results when there is not a shortage of hogs and when market prices are not so flattering.—Nebraska Farmer.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a cough cure like Dr. Snoop's. For years Dr. Snoop has fought against the use of Opium, Chloroform, or unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Snoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Snoop's cough cure contained a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poison. He has thus made it possible for mothers to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Snoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

Wednesday afternoon Rush Schuyler, a young farmer residing two miles south of Hastings, received painful injuries. Mr. Schuyler was driving a wagon containing two cows, when the wagon went down one side of an embankment, the weight of the two animals being thrown in such a way as to overturn the wagon. Mr. Schuyler was thrown to the ground, striking upon the head and right shoulder, and the wagon and one cow fell on him. He was unconscious when rescued from this position, and a physician was summoned who found that the right shoulder was dislocated and the ligaments torn loose, besides many bruises, which will require many weeks for recovery.
