

NOW AND THEN.

Do you know that Falls City could be the most sightly city in the state. Situated as it is at the crest of a hill rising from the beautiful valley of the Nemaha; its streets lined with towering trees, and its homes surrounded by wide spreading lawns, there is no reason why it should not be known as Falls City the beautiful. A few days ago I visited a little city in Kansas, and the picture I saw will remain a refreshing memory for some time to come. So struck was I with the general neatness that I inquired the reason for it all. The system employed, I was told by the hotel man, was for each property owner on a given street to enter into a friendly contest to make his home the best kept on that street. The result was that the entire city presented a picture of delight. It required no more than a few minutes each day on the part of the owner to keep the property clean, the lawns green and even, the sidewalks kept up and the trees trimmed and tidy. There is no better way to impress the stranger within the gates than to keep clean. It is well worth all the effort it costs even if there were no other benefits conferred. But, the moral influence on a community is the most beneficent result. The personal pride in the appearance of your own home as well as that of your neighbor counts far more than you realize. Spring is just here. The outdoor life has just begun. Why not make your home the prettiest on your street? Why not keep the lawn like a stretch of green carpet, your trees trimmed and tidy, your house becomingly painted, your walks in good repair? If you do this your neighbor will follow suit if he has any pride. If your neighbor does, so will his neighbor also. Result, a pretty town.

One philosopher said that life was acquisition, another said life is abandonment. I believe with the latter. Hopes, ambitions and desires that once were very present and insistent, gradually slip away from us and are abandoned. Those things we believe in while young and which did their part in the building of our individuality, remain with us no longer as we grow older. Every boy wants, yes and believes, he will some day be rich. Every young father wants to leave his children money enough so that they will not battle with the bread and butter question as he has had to do. But as the years go on and he learns what the mere struggle has done to develop him and sees the waste and disappointment of the idle rich, he gradually changes his ideas and hopes for nothing better than to leave his children a good education, a good name and the incentive to labor and to wait. One of the richest of New York's men said the other day: "Oh, that I could give my son the advantages of the poor." Sounds funny doesn't it? But it isn't funny, its tragic. Think of a healthy young American hampered and restricted by the limitations of wealth. Satiated with the pleasures money gives, tired of life before life has begun. None of the democracy of the poor for him. No playing black-man on the village green with Jimmie and Butch and Shorty and the rest of the kids. No fishing with a cotton string and a willow pole. No wading in the creek; nothing, nothing but money. He learns without being taught that it isn't necessary for him to work. There is neither opportunity nor occasion for him to develop the capabilities God has given him, for he is rich. I have seen the pampered child of fortune with his fine clothes and pale face riding down the avenues of a city in his motor car, and I have thanked God that with the same eyes I have seen my little boy with freckled face and bare feet going to the candy shop, surrounded by his playmates, to spend the nickel he had earned by selling old bottles, for I am older now and have lost the envy of the rich. Give your boy a good education, give him the democracy of the poor, give him a pure, wholesome home, bequeath to him a good name and you have done more for him than if you had left him millions.

This lesson we have learnt at home. I remember a young man of Falls City who was left a large estate and I will never forget how it ruined his life. I saw him not long since and the wasted years were stamped on his face. For the past few weeks this community has listened to the bitter struggle between children for their fathers's money. It would have been better and the world would have been happier if the old gentleman who earned it had burnt his money to ashes than to leave it to add fuel to the flames of hate and passion among those where love alone should abide. As I write this tonight, with my children lying sleeping side by side, it seems that I would rather go out of the world without the price to pay the Ferryman to carry me across the dark river, than to leave anything that would make them spend their days hating each other after I am gone. Sometimes I grow weary of struggle and long for a time to rest, but necessity keeps me at work. I may not want to work tomorrow, but I have never regretted that I worked yesterday. Teach your boy to labor, teach him that he must labor until the final rest. By so doing you are preparing for the use of the talents with which he has been endowed, without which he will never attain his highest development.

Worth White.

A Scripture quotation may be a Satanic argument when chosen with a sinful motive.

There are sweet surprises awaiting many a humble soul fighting against great odds in the battle of a seemingly commonplace life.

There are few feelings more satisfactory than, when misunderstood, to fall back on one's own sense of pure motives and right conduct.

Follow your calling diligently, for be assured, work, far from being a hardship, is a blessing, and you will find it a help, not a hindrance.

Bad manners soil fine clothes from within worse than contact with the world does from without, and courtesy and kindness win where force fails.

A man's "religion" consists not of the many things he is in doubt of and tries to believe, but of the few he is assured, and has no need of effort for believing.

A man is sooner to be trusted with another person's secret than with his own; a woman, on the contrary, keeps her own secret, though she keeps nobody's else.

Much of what a man tells you in the hour of affliction, in sudden anger or in any outpouring of his heart, should be sacred. In his craving for sympathy he has spoken to you as to his own soul.

The efforts we make for any worthy object may not seem successful today or tomorrow, but they are a part of the grand work that is going on slowly but surely and no one of them can we afford to lose.

Be discreet. Remember that the walls have ears, and let those words which, if repeated, would cause trouble, remain unsaid. Indulge not in scandal. Do nothing in secret that you would be ashamed to have done publicly.

It always argues a base and cowardly temper to whisper secretly what you dare not speak to a man's face. Therefore be very cautious in speaking of these three sorts of persons—namely, the innocent, the dead and the absent.

"If I were to give you an orange," said a well-known lawyer, "I would simply say, 'I give you an orange;' but should the transaction be intrusted to a lawyer to put in writing, he would adopt this form: 'I hereby give, grant and convey to you all my interest, right, title, and advantage of and in the said orange, together with its rind, skin, juice, pulp, pips and all rights and advantages therein, with full power to bite.'"
