One William McCray He Sidesteps His Mistakes.

It is not extraordinary for men of McCray's stamp to lay it on the other fellow. The world has known such characters since the time of Adam, and has despised them fully as long. Hereafter let him be known as Adam McCray.

Very appropriately McCray uses the Journal as his medium of slander and last week tried to sidestep the mistakes the Tribune fastened upon him. He says that no offer was made the county to settle the Constantine bridge case for $1200, but on the contrary says, "Reavis came before the board and offered to settle for $4500 and this was the only offer we could ever get out of these people."

"We produce the following signed statement concerning this settlement.

"I was attorney for the Constantines in their suits against the county for injuries sustained in the collapsing of the Schulenberg bridge. I offered to settle Mrs. Constantine's case for $1200 and made this offer to McCray not ten hours before the case was tried. Messrs. Hinton, Zoellers and Bauer urged this settlement but I could get nothing from McCray but insults. It cost the county more than $3000 to pay judgment, costs and attorney's fees. This statement will be verified by the other members of the board."

C. F. REAVIS

McCray was chairman of the bridge committee for at least a year before this accident occurred. The Gilligan Co. had the annual contract for building and repairing the county bridges. McCray doesn't like the Gilligan company and refused, wherever possible, to let it do any work. McCray says, concerning his knowledge of the defective condition of the Schulenberg bridge. "As to the supervisors ever mentioning the condition of this bridge to me as stated, this is also a malicious falsehood. I never knew there was such a bridge in existence."

Adam was the chairman of the bridge committee and should have known there was such a bridge. He was anxious enough to throw all the blame on Chas. Santo, the supervisor from that district, after the trouble came. Santo, however, was not on the bridge committee.

He could order no bridges. The bridge committee, McCray chairman, was the sole authority for ordering bridges. Santo tried to get McCray to repair this bridge but McCray would rather ruin the life of the poor German lady, who is a hopeless cripple through his neglect, than to let the Gilligan Co. repair the bridge.

"I hereby certify that I called McCray's attention to the dangerous character of the Schulenberg bridge many times and at least six months before the Constantine accident, and he refused to do anything about it."

CHAS. SANTO.

This attitude of McCray's towards a personal enemy cost the county more than $3000, and ruined the life of a poor German lady who is the mother of seven small children.

The money part of it may appeal to McCray, but the suffering, the crippled condition of Mrs. Constantine will not lay very heavily on his conscience. He it was who, when John Hinton was trying to help a family without humiliating them and suggested that a few dollars a week be set aside for their assistance, he it was who protested with the statement, "Let them go to the poor house where they belong."

But McCray says it wasn't my fault that the Rulo bridge was built off the road. John Hutchings and John Gilligan did that. Again does Adam say, "It was Eve who ate the apple."

John Gilligan was not on the board and had absolutely nothing to say where the bridges were to be located. The truth of the matter is that land had been purchased for this bridge site that did not suit McCray and he demanded that the bridge be put where he wanted it or he would not consent to the erection of the bridge at all. He had the bridge built where he wanted it and it cost the county many hundreds of dollars to move it back on to the road and to the place where the land had been bargained for in the first place.

McCray says it cost more to put the bridge where it should have been in the first place than it should.

This is a poor excuse; a man should have intelligence enough to locate a bridge on the road. John Gilligan moved the bridge at actual cost and did not make a penny on the work.

The old second hand bridge bought by McCray for the DuBois bridge is the subject of his next defense.

He does not deny that he purchased this bridge of a man who was then and is now under indictment in Beatrice for fraud in bridge work. He does not deny that he was compelled to admit before the board that the bridge would be used by but two families.

He does not deny that there was a good bridge over the same stream within half mile of the place where he was to build this.

What would you think of the business judgment of a man who would want to spend more than a thousand dollars to put another steel bridge across the Nemaha south of Falls City or across the Muddy west of Stella on a half section line?

His defense is a Mr. Gardiner, an employee of the Gilligan Co., said the trial was all right.

Mr. Gardiner is an experienced man. It was he who called attention to the fact that McCray had bought old second hand material that had been used somewhere else and unloaded it on this county to help McCray get even with his enemies.

"I hereby certify that I never said to anybody that the DuBois bridge was all right and a good bridge. On the contrary I said and still say that the steel is old, rust eaten and second hand, and would be unsafe no matter how carefully erected." A. F. GARDINER.

This old junk is still in the court house yard where it may be seen by any body interested. This deal alone cost the county $800 and this money was spent because McCray had it in for the Gilligan Company.

Mr. McCray says some very harsh things about John A. Crook for which he tries to hold Mr. Gilligan responsible. Again does the fine hand of Adam show itself. Mr. Gilligan authorizes us to say that when McCray states that he ever said Mr. Crook "fleeced him out of $17000" he is telling what is untrue. Even now a criminal libel suit is being prepared and the truth of this statement will be made public.

But McCray says that the Gilligan Co. instituted and paid the expenses of the suit to contest his seat several years ago.

Ah, there's the rub. For sometime we have wondered why McCray had it in for the Bridge Co. Nobody who knew him ever believed him sincere in his pretensions. Everybody was wondering about his motive, and now we have it.

The Tribune cares nothing about his fight with the Gilligan Co., however. We have troubles of our own. But in the interest of good government, as one who helps pay the taxes of this county, we do hope that the voters of William McCray's district will send a representative who will not squander thousands of dollars of the peoples money in an effort to play even with his personal enemies.

The republicans are not asking much this year but the character of the candidates indicate very clearly that the party is very earnest in asking for the little that it is. It is to be regretted that we have no candidates for several of the offices, but it is a source for congratulation that our candidates are all so eminently fitted for the positions to which they aspire.
