LEFT ON HER DOORSTEP FOR THIS MOTHER

Mrs. A. G. Tuson, of Livermore, Cal., writes: "I picked up from my doorstep one day a little book in which I soon became very much interested. My little girl of five years of age had been troubled for a long time with loss of appetite, extreme nervousness and undue fatigue. She was all run-down and in a very delicate condition. This little book was very comprehensively written, and told of the new method of extracting the medicinal elements of the cod's liver from the oil, eliminating the obnoxious oil which is so hard for children to take.

"Just the thing," said I, "for my little daughter," and I immediately went for a bottle of Vinol. It helped her wonderfully. She has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, and she does not take cold half so easily.

"I am extremely grateful for the good it has done her, and I hope other mothers who have weak, delicate or ailing children will be benefited by my experience and just give Vinol a trial."

The Last Chance

A Night at Headquarters, Awaiting the Election Returns.

The enthusiasts were gathering. They were crowded about the bulletin boards, the newspaper offices and in the several headquarters. Of course, it being in Lincoln, the first news was concerning Lancaster county. And equally of course, the first news coming from Lancaster county, it was all Bryan. This news wasn't very cheering to the crowd in the republican headquarters, but despite the hoarse cheering of the crowd down street, the man from Richardson said, "just wait till you hear from my county."

In the main room were four telephone operators whose lines were connected with special wires through the state as well as with the national headquarters in Chicago. A dozen men in shirt sleeves were about the table tabulating the vote, comparing it with previous votes and figuring the percentage of loss or gain. It didn't take very long to see that Lincoln and Lancaster county were Bryan's body and soul.

"What do you know about this town anyway?" asked a Lincoln politician. The Tribune being a religious paper it will hardly do to record the replies made to the question.

"What do you hear from Richardson?" asked the Falls City man.

"Nothing as yet," was the reply, "but here's something from New York."

"Let's have it," demanded everybody.

"All New York papers are printing extras announcing the election of Taft," read the bulletin. A moment after the cheers from the streets indicated that the lantern had thrown the bulletin on the sheet across the way.

"Mr. Lindsay, Columbus, Ohio, wants you," said the operator. Everybody crowded close to the phone trying to figure the conversation from Lindsay's part of the talk. "Columbus says Taft carries Ohio by 50,000," announced Lindsay. Again, though louder, came the roar of the mob on the streets. No more cheers were heard for Bryan, but Taft, Taft, Taft was repeated in the cries with monotonous regularity.

Indiana was next, then Illinois and West Virginia and the rest, all the rest but Nebraska. "Hayward of Chicago is on the line and says its all over," broke in the operator: Omaha reports a Bryan majority and it seemed certain that Nebraska had joined hands with Texas, Mississippi and the solid south.

"What do you hear from Richardson?" the impatient man broke in.

"Nothing as yet," was the reply.

Hearing nothing from Richardson at republican headquarters the Falls City man went over to democratic headquarters a little after midnight in search of news. The crowd he found there looked quite different from the republicans he had just left. The glamor of Lancaster's vote had worn off during the night, and the tense, drawn faces about the littered tables, told a story of sincere disappointment. From a point of vantage on the walls the face of their leader looked down on their grief, and the familiar question, "Shall the people rule?" figured every where.

Tom Allen was talking with Fairview and his voice was the voice of a tired man. "Are you getting anything out there that we haven't got here?" he asked wearily. After a moments wait he continued, "Oh, yes we're all shot to pieces, no doubt of it. From the way New York looks somebody has been a little off color, don't you think?" Again came a moments wait as the crowd stood silent, then Allen shifted in his chair and said, "Yes, I think so.—Good night—I'm going to close up and go home—it's all off."

His last chance to win the dream of a life time; on this chance he had put everything. Night and day had he gone until voice and body were worn with the struggle, and now, it was all over, it was time to lock up and go home, it was all off—forever.

I felt sorry for him and for them, I disliked to break into a stranger's house when it is full of grief, but I was anxious and so asked, "Have you heard anything from Richardson?" They looked at me a little dazed as though they had forgotten that Richardson was on the map but finally replied.

"Nothing, as yet."

Back to the other headquarters we went from this house of despair. Back to where the lights were burning and the telephones brought report after report of the tremendous vote Taft had received. One state after another reported ever increasing majorities until New York and Illinois alone reached the half million mark. The crowd dwindled. The floors and tables were littered with paper. The chairs, as they were moved, grated unpleasantly on the tiled floor of the office in the hollow emptiness of the room. A few belated celebrators were shouting for Taft as they passed the building. The ring of the telephone bells sounded fainter and fainter, and the drone of the operators dwindled and was still.

The Falls City man woke with a start to see the lights in the globes a sickly yellow, for the gray face of dawn was looking in the windows. He rubbed his eyes and stretched painfully from his cramped position, then looking toward the chief tabulator he asked, "Have you heard anything from Richardson?"

"Nothing as yet," was the reply.

THOSE STOLEN BOOKS

Detectives Learn Definitely They Were Taken to Beatrice

The man who stole the books of defunct Chamberlain banking house while they were in a box in the office of Sheriff Miner, was seen on his way to Tecumseh last Friday and was traced almost to Beatrice on his way back, but the officers had no means of declaring his identity. It is thought some person in Beatrice did the work, but there is no certainty of this.

About 6 o'clock on the evening of the robbery, Lawrence and Pat Morrissey saw a man driving a fine team of black horses, in a buggy with a red gear, on his way to Tecumseh. W. C. Cameron, a hardware merchant, saw the same man at the east approach to the court house about the time of the theft with a pair of small trucks such as used to handle heavy boxes. Fred and Will Snyder saw the same rig going west later in the evening. At the farm of John McKee the man drove into his place and through a cornfield, where he fed his team. The rig was traced to within three miles of Beatrice. Sheriff Miner and Detective Bentley of Lincoln, have been at work on the case and the facts here given are the results of an overland trip they made from Beatrice to Tecumseh.—Auburn Republican.
