The Difference

What is the difference between high grade and low grade baking powders?
All baking powders are white and are sold in round cans with bright labels. They look alike, but in contents they are very different.
High grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar derived from grapes. They are healthful and economical to use.
Low grade baking powders are made of alum an astringent mineral acid.
Before the Pure Food Law only a chemist could tell by analysis one from the other.
But now baking powders have the ingredients printed on the back of the label. By reading the label the housekeeper knows the ingredients and being careful of the welfare of her household, avoids the alum kind of baking powder.
Good baking powder is one of the most useful things in the kitchen—and there is a difference.

Brag and Bluster

This is something we never indulge in, simply because it is not good business and defeats the very thing sought. We talk freely and frankly at all times regarding our business, because we have nothing to conceal, and want everyone who does business with us to know just what they are about, but we do not indulge in what has been termed "hot air." This element may be valuable to the promoter, but is of no use to the banker, the promoter, as you know, being a man who always stands ready to furnish the ocean if someone else will provide the ships. In our advertising it has been our policy to make no statements not absolutely borne out by the facts. The banking business must always have a basis of facts for its conduct, and when these are present, brag and bluster are unnecessary simply because the latter are usually employed to cover up facts. The more people know about the methods of this bank the easier it is to do business with them, hence our desire to keep the public informed fully at all times.
