CONGRESSMAN SPEAKS

McGuire of Nebraska Addresses Congress on Good Roads

Washington, D. C., May 29—

Vice-President James S. Sherman will arrive at Union Station this afternoon at about 3:45 o'clock, where he will be met by Mayor Mahool, and escorted to McCoy Hall, where the National Good Roads Congress is in session and where he will make a speech. Governor Crothers is presiding at the afternoon session, and Admiral Winfield Scott Schley will also be one of the speakers. Mr. Sherman is expected to return to Washington as soon as the Congress adjourns this afternoon.

National aid for public improvement is close to the fundamental purpose of government, and it is infinitely more to be desired that the energies of the government be extended to aid a comprehensive plan of internal improvements than that it should appropriate excessive millions of dollars for armament to better enable us to mix up in the jangle of the world politics, said Representative John A. McGuire of Lincoln, Neb., who delivered an address at the morning session today of the Congress.

"Rather should we devote our surplus energies, continued the Western Congressman, to the social and industrial betterment of 90,000,000 of people at home than that we parade our battleships, with the engines of destruction, before the nations of the earth."

Congressman McGuire's address was the principal one of the morning. At 12:30 o'clock the Congress adjourned and reconvened at 3 o'clock this afternoon to hear Vice-President Sherman and Admiral Schley make Congress has arranged with President John E. Semmes of the School board to have many teachers and several hundred school children on hand to add to Vice-President Sherman's welcome. The convention will hold its final session here this afternoon. Tomorrow the delegates will go to Washington, where they will hold a session. An audience has been arranged with President Taft, and a set of resolutions commending the President for the interest he has shown in the good roads movement will be presented to the chief executive.

In his address this morning Congressman McGuire said that in the last year the subject of good roads has come more and more to his attention and his judgment is that it will succeed because the movement rests not only on the basis of a broad social and business economy, but also upon the policy of a wise statesmanship.

Increase the public debt, said Mr.

McGuire, is rightly discouraged by taxes people, but the advance of taxes or the increase of debt is not of grave consequence or regret to them when results are of a lasting nature and assured to all. Improvement of the public highways will of necessity bring added cost in connection, but expenditures which will to all, consistent with public needs, make possible increased happiness will not arouse any considerable opposition.

"We of the later generations are restless and discouraged because public improvements have not followed rapidly upon the improvement of private property. We must not forget, however, that in our zeal we are still passing through the period of settlement, and that the period of great public improvements has really just arrived.

The invocation this morning was delivered by Rev. Dr. Resnau of Eutaw Place Temple, who spoke on the influence of good roads on the church.

Col. W. F. Beazley of North Carolina, who was a colonel in the Confederate army at the age of 19 years, told the convention in an address this morning that it was more important for this country to devote its energy to highways than to inland waterways. If the Government, said the Colonel, can appropriate $500,000,000 for waterways there is no reason why it should not give an equal amount of money to agricultural, without which the waterways are useless.

If you want governmental aid for roads of State, go to Congress and demand them to listen to and grant your prayers. Congress is now confused with a tariff and other bills, and this is an opportune time for the Good Roads Congress to place set of resolutions before Congress which will straighten it out at least on the question of good roads."

A Unique Lecture

Judge Frank P. Sadler, Judge of the Municipal Court of Chicago, has consented to give Chautauqua audiences the benefit of his experience on the bench in dealing with the criminal class. He has presided the past two years in the Harrison Street and Des Plaines Street criminal branches of the Municipal Court, two branches dealing with the most vicious criminal classes of the great city of Chicago. He has met daily the boys and girls taking their first lessons in crime. He has dealt with the young men ripening into criminal life. He has come in contact with the hardened criminals, committing the most desperate crimes.

Would you hear this strangely fascinating story of the criminal life of a great city? Hear Judge Sadler lecture on
