INTERESTING TALK ABOUT THE CULTURE OF OLIVES.

The Process of Manufacturing Olive Oil, the Different Grades, the Uses It is Put To.

Olive Oil is of very ancient use. It was used for medicine and anointing in the dawn of early history and its use as a food antedates the Christian era. Even the cultivation of the olive tree is so far in the past that it is difficult to tell when it began.

The Olive tree grows from fifteen to twenty-five feet high but is kept trimmed by the culturist. The leaves are evergreen and the wood of the tree is very hard. It is not very prolific, not more than ten per cent of the flowers producing fruit. It flourishes in all countries bordering on the Mediterranean and has been transplanted to Australia and California. There are more than thirty varieties and the oil varies with the variety, the climate, the season, and more especially with the care, culture and harvesting. Green olives are prepared for the table, and are a familiar delicacy. Ripe olives are prepared in the same way and are highly esteemed by many.

The oil is obtained from the ripe fruit by expression and the finest oils come from Southern France, the city of Nice being the principal export point. The principal reason why French oils are finer than others is that the French culturist gives his trees better care, picks early, and almost entirely by hand. The Italian oil ranks next. It is quite as nutritious as the French oil, grade for grade, but is not as delicate. The California oils are very much like the Italian; slightly inferior, I think, although they command about the same price in this country.

The various grades of Olive Oil depends upon the condition of the fruit and upon the method used. The best is called "Virgin Oil" or by the French "Premier." It is obtained from choice, hand-picked fruit, subjected only to light pressure. It is literally "Premier," or the first oil to flow from the press, the pressure not being sufficient to force out the ranker portions. This "Virgin or Premier" oil is the finest obtainable.

The second grade is obtained by adding to the residuum in the press, other fruit not selected as carefully and subjected to extreme pressure. This oil is good, but is ranker than the "Virgin" oil for which it is often substituted.

A still lower grade may be made in the same way if there should be much defective or damaged fruit. A very low grade oil is obtained by boiling the refuse from the presses and skimming off the oil that rises to the surface. And a very rank oil, fit only for technical purposes, is made by fermenting the refuse and again subjecting it to very heavy pressure.

Olive oil is a nutritious, fat producing food. It is very easily assimilated and the fine oils rarely disagree with even a delicate stomach. Although one of the oldest of condiments, many people do not know the food value of this product.

Medicinally, Olive Oil is used as a laxative for infants, to increase the production of fat in adults, and in consumption as a substitute for Cod Liver oil, which however, it does not equal.

It also has considerable action on the liver, increasing the flow of the bile and is very beneficial in the treatment of gall stones and biliary calculi.

Constant use of Olive oil improves the complexion and makes the skin soft and smooth. Small doses are of little value. Generous and continued use is necessary to obtain results.

More than three-fourths of all the oil consumed is used as a table delicacy for salads and in cooking. In oil producing countries it takes the place of fat and butter.

There is always a heavy demand for high grade Olive oil and the consumption increases constantly. The low grade oils should not be used internally. They are rank and disorder digestion.

Like other food products, Olive oil has advanced in price. A very abrupt advance occurred after the earthquake at Messina, because large quantities of stored oil were destroyed.

Our importations of Olive oil from France and Italy are enormous, partly because California furnishes but a comparatively small amount but largely because of the better quality of the European oils. But while most of our oils come from France and Italy nearly all our olives come from Cadiz, Spain. They are especially cultivated in that locality and the product we receive is known as the Queen Olive. These are large, fine fruit. The same provinces produce a small olive known as the Manzanillo. This variety is mostly consumed at home, few being exported.

WAITER WHO GAVE AWAY TIPS

Divided Money Received with Pianist Who Had Played Accompaniment to His Singing.

Some out of town visitors were taking in an Eighth avenue cafe. The orchestra was excellent, the pianist especially, but first one waiter and then another, to their surprise, would quit waiting and sing.

One sang so well that he was encored again and again. That is, quarters were thrown at him from all sides of the room. Half dollars sometimes. They fell in the sawdust about his feet. He kept right on singing, moving toward the railing quarters, however, and pushing them nearer to him, so that he presently stood in an interesting little circle of quarters and half dollars, the pianist playing his very best at his accompaniment, ringing in extra touches, playing beautifully, indeed.

"How accommodating the accompanist is," commented a visitor.

"Wait, and you'll see why," said a New Yorker who was with them.

Just then, the rain of money ceasing, the waiter quit singing, stooped, gathered up the money, divided it in half, and gave half to the pianist before he resumed his work of waiting on the guests.

"That's the first waiter I ever saw give away his tips," the visitor said.—New York Post.

WONDERS OF THE ANTARCTIC

Member of Expedition Impressed with the Fascination of That Remarkable Land.

Dr. Lionville, who is with the Charcot expedition, in a letter to Paris, says: "The Antarctic region is quite up to its reputation. I understand how one can be fascinated with these weird landscapes, where everything that nature shows is strange and unaccustomed.

"The animals are prodigiously curious, and the formation of the mountains and glaciers, very unexpected. It is unfortunate that we cannot spend ten days at this place, 'Deception,' so inaptly named. The penguins are most interested in my work. When I turn over pieces of rock on the shores they come up to watch what I am doing, draw closer and closer, elbow each other to see better, peck the places where I am digging and end up by hustling me. I had to speak very plainly to one this morning, and he walked away limping."

Poets of National Greatness.

Victor Hugo once said in his lordly, generalizing way, that it was Shakespeare who prevented England from being only another Carthage; and it is indeed true that but for our great poets we should not hold the place we hold in the opinion of Europe. Because of them we do not wince when we are described as a nation of shopkeepers, for they prove that we, like the Florentines and Venetians, are something more than that. M. Bourget has expressed the general wonder of cultivated foreigners that the English nation, which seems so matter of fact, and even dull, should have produced two poets compared with whose works all other poetry seems to be prose; and these poets are the very two who are to be honored today in Rome. It is certainly a fact that more than any other nation we produce men of genius who vary extremely from our normal type, and we never have produced more wonderful poets than Shelley and Keats.—London Times.

Stockholm "the Paris of the North."

Mr. Edward D. Winslow, who was recently appointed American consul general in Stockholm, has arrived in Berlin from America and will proceed in a few days to assume his post. He speaks of the rapidly growing importance of the city of Stockholm as a center for tourists, and especially for Americans, who are more and more numerous every year. The influx is expected to be greater than ever this summer, in view of the exposition which is to be held in Stockholm. "Some Americans already know the attractions of Stockholm," said Mr. Winslow, "but more of them should know, for Stockholm is really the Paris of the north."—From a Berlin Letter to the New York Herald's Paris Edition.

Different.

It was the bachelor girl who stood at the door when the woman opened it. "I thought," she said, "that you didn't allow your neighbors to put their milk bottles in the hall. The last time I was here you were raising Cain about it. And here I had to walk through a forest of them to get to your door. What change has come over the spirit of your dream?" The woman took her by the hand and drew her into the flat. "Talk a little lower, please," she implored. "Those milk bottles don't belong to my neighbors. They belong to me."
