PREVENTION OF INFECTION

THE EFFERVESCENT GERMICIDE PEROXIDE OF HYDROGEN.

Its Great Usefulness As An Enemy to Infection — Entertaining
Talk by Dr. Morsman.

Peroxide of Hydrogen, or Hydrogen Dioxide, is a gas soluble in water, and this solution is what is sold in the shops.

Thirty years ago it was little used except as a bleaching agent and for chemical tests. Now it is widely known and millions of bottles are sold every year. It is an antiseptic and germicide of great power; very prompt and thorough in action and absolutely harmless and unobnoxious. In action it froths and bubbles, destroying all germs, pus and offensive matter. There is nothing better to use for cuts, wounds, ulcers, abscesses or any open or running sore. It destroys every infection it can reach and leaves the surface clean and in good condition for healthy granulation.

It should be applied to every fresh cut when there is a possibility of infection being carried into the wound. Its injection into the wound, so it will reach every surface, is a guarantee of safety. Whenever the skin is broken from any accidental cause it is a good and safe application and it never causes pain or irritation. The frequent application to abraded surfaces keeps the new granulations clean and healthy and pus cannot form; neither will there be "prone flesh," or excessive inflammation.

For throat affections, when there is excessive exudation of mucus it is very effective used as a gargle or by swabbing with cotton tied to a stick and saturated with the full strength solution. As a gargle it can be diluted about one-half with water, but it will do no harm if used full strength. Still the half strength solution is sufficiently strong.

It is a little difficult to get the effect in children because they cannot gargle effectively, but the frequent use of a swab saturated with it does very well. As a mouth wash I know of nothing that equals it in efficiency. It can be used diluted or full strength. Even when used one part of peroxide to three of water it is still quite active and when it is "sozzled" around in the mouth, forced between the teeth and under the lips, it finds every bacterial "colony," and leaves the mouth clean.

It can be used for all nasal troubles reduced to one part in five or six of warm water and introduced by spray or by nasal douche. Thus it becomes useful in catarrh, hay fever, colds in the head and even in alleviating the nasal symptoms of la grippe. It should always be diluted when used in the nasal passages.

The strong solution relieves the itching of mosquito bites and stings of insects. It is used as an agent for bleaching the hair also.

Peroxide of Hydrogen is not much used internally except in local diseases of the stomach, in which case it can be taken in teaspoonful doses diluted with milk or water. It is never absorbed, because it decomposes as soon as it meets with anything to act upon.

There are many makes of peroxide on the market. All of these seem to be fairly good, though the preparation made by well known and reliable manufacturers like Parke Davis & Co., or Mallinckrodt, bring a little higher price.

Dioxogen is a copyrighted name for an advertised product. Of course the intention is to make a demand by advertising for this particular brand on the claim that it is better or purer.

Dioxogen is nothing but Peroxide of Hydrogen, and I cannot see that it is any better than the ordinary brands. As it has no advantages over the ordinary brands the advertisers seek to make it appear to have, so they advertise that it contains no acetanilide, implying that this is a detriment to other brands. I do not think that Dioxogen contains any acetanilide because the makers have to wire the corks in the bottles just as everyone did before they discovered the use of acetanilide. Peroxide of Hydrogen is not a stable preparation—that is, it is not permanent.

Being a gas dissolved in water, quite naturally this gas will separate from the water and evaporate. It also decomposes, and that is why it is an antiseptic. If it didn't decompose it would have no antiseptic value. It is the free oxygen that does the work. It will also expand with heat, just as any gas will, and expansion so great, will blow the corks out of the containers.

"When you drink 'soda water' you drink water containing the gas carbon dioxide in solution, and if you let your glass stand exposed the gas will leave the water entirely. If you bottle it you must wire the corks in or it will expand and blow them out. Just so with Hydrogen Peroxide, except that being more soluble than carbon dioxide gas it is more stable in solution than the latter gas and separation and expansion are not as rapid. Therefore if we make a solution of Hydrogen Peroxide alone in water, we must wire our corks in, or it may get into a warm place and the expansion will blow them out.

Chemists have discovered that a peroxide solution containing one-tenth grain of acetanilide to the ounce makes a very stable and permanent solution and that the acetanilide does not interfere in the least with the antiseptic effect of the solution. It does make just a little difference in the taste, but not enough to be important. Thus prepared it is not necessary to wire in the corks. It is necessary to keep the bottles corked of course, but even when open the solution remains permanent for many days. The presence of acetanilide is therefore not a fault, but a virtue, and when the

MARKET LETTER.

Letter from our Regular Correspondent at Kansas City.

Kansas City Stock Yard, April 5, 1910.—Buyers dominated the cattle market last week up to Wednesday and succeeded in reducing the prices 20 to 50 cents. The bear campaign was run on the basis of liberal cattle receipts, but it became evident Thursday that the total for the week would fall short of any recent week, and some firmness was injected into the situation the last days of the week, leaving it in good shape for the opening this week. Predictions of meagre receipts at the markets today were verified, the supply here 7,000 head, and moderate elsewhere. A good many contract cattle bought for delivery April first came in last week, but this influence is absent today, and prospects favor light receipts, balance of this week. Nobody believed the market was very badly hurt last week at any time, and it was always in good position for a rapid recovery. The slim receipts today put matters back into the hands of sellers, and prices are 10 to 25 higher, mostly 10 to 15 up. Nothing choice is here today, but prime steers are quotable at $8.15 to $8.40 today. Bulk of steers selling at $7 to $7.80, very few steers for less than $6.40, cows $4.25 to $6.15 calves $4.50 to $8.75. A good many heifers are said to be on feed in Nebraska, and some good strings will be run to market this week. Country buyers lost some of their enthusiasm last week also, and prices closed lower, but the market is firm today, stockers at $4.40 to $6.25, feeders $5.75 to $6.60.

There was a small increase in the hog supply last week over previous weeks in the last month, and the market drifted along in a rut, without much net change for the week. Supply today is 8,000 head, market opened strong but the close was weak to 5 lower, top $10.75, bulk $10.50 to $10.70, light hogs up to $10.60. Provisions specialists say there is a determined effort to get provisions on a lower and more safe basis, the success of which would take some of the steam out of live hog prices.

Kearney's Pleasure Resort.

Lake Kearney will be made available for pleasure seekers, on a larger scale than heretofore. Two thousand trees have been planted this spring. A steam launch has been purchased, and a pavilion is being erected. The place offers splendid facilities for a pleasure resort and efforts are being made to put the grounds in good shape for the summer.

Fred Scholl and family, who spent the winter with their daughter, Mrs. Ben Apel in New Mexico, returned Friday. They express themselves as exceedingly glad to be back to their old home among their friends once more. New Mexico is not Falls City. At least so Fred thinks.

"Dioxogen" people wire their corks into the bottles it looks like a confession of weakness.

So when you read an advertisement of "Dioxogen" you need pay no attention to the claims for greater purity, greater strength, nor heed what it said about the dangers of acetanilide. They are simply trying to induce you to demand their product, which is no better than any good peroxide product.

It is a game that is often played in drug lines, as we will have several occasions to point out.

Keep Peroxide of Hydrogen well corked and in a moderately cool place. Use it freely and often. Always have it on hand. It may prevent blood poisoning or tetanus. It is one of the best things chemistry has given us and is just as useful to the veterinary as to the physician; just as valuable in the stable as in the house. It should have an honorable place in the family medicine closet.
