TYPE IS PASSING

"OLD LADY" WILL SHORTLY BE BUT A MEMORY.

In This Day and Generation Father Time is Defied to an Extent Undreamed of by the Past Generation.

We of this generation remember her well—the gentle old lady with hair of silver, crowned with honorable years and treasured memories, and slipping quietly into the shadows. In other days no home seemed complete without her presence, and the very dignity of her gentle grace added an indescribable charm to family life. She wore her years as a badge of distinction and did not begrudge exacting "Time his toll." Her journey up the hill of life in the blazing sunlight of youth was replete with incidents with whose memory she loved to enrich her twilight hours. She left to others the activities of the present, the recollections of her day were yet of sufficient importance to absorb her interest, and she "went about doing good" in her own unobtrusive way. Her sphere of existence was limited, it is true, but to her retiring nature and old fashioned ideas the familiar intercourse around the fireside appealed as no outside interests could ever do. She is rapidly becoming but a memory. The typical "old lady" of a generation or two ago has passed away forever. Here and there, in a few families who have not outlived the delightful customs that prevailed so extensively only a comparatively few years ago may be found some last exponent of her type, who is loved and honored by all who know her and who exerts in her own way a more lasting influence for good than do her independent sisters in their more aggressive lives.

We have been taught from early youth to reverence old age, and one of our proudest boasts as a civilized nation is that we have remained true to our teachings in this regard at least. In these more engaging times, however, there seems really to be no old age in the former acceptance of the term. It is true that the years add up just the same, but nature seems to have extended her lease of life and rejuvenated the human system. The dainty lace caps that once set so lovingly upon the white hairs have given way before the onslaughts of the hair-dresser, and the somber black bonnet that tied with strings has long since been succeeded by the latest creation of the milliner's art. It is just as well, perhaps, that the period of a person's mental as well as physical activity can be lengthened to an almost indefinite extent, speaking comparatively, of course, for just so much more of life's joy will fall to his share, even at the risk of a corresponding increase of its sorrow.

She Walks in Beauty.

She walks in beauty like the night, as some romantic singer said; her eyes give forth a starry light, her lips are of a cherry red; across the floor she seems to float; she seems to me beyond compare a being perfect—till I note the way she has done up her hair. She must have toiled through half a day to build that large, unwieldy mass; she must have used a bale of hay, and strips of tin, and wire of brass; her sisters must have helped to braid, her mother wrought and tinkered there, and butler, cook and chambermaid all helped to wrestle with her hair. And after all the grinding toil and all the braiding and the fuss, the one effect is just to spoil her beauty and make people cuss. She walks in beauty like the night where nights are most serenely fair; but, Julius Caesar! she's a sight, when she's got on her Sunday hair!—London Tit-Bits.

Making a Good Job of It.

Roy E. Tyler, the engineering expert, said in the course of an address on the Panama canal: "Much of the adverse criticism of the canal is unscientific, ridiculous. It makes me think of a faker I heard the other day. The man was selling hair grower. He said: 'Yes, gents, one bottle of this unrivaled hair grower will raise a rich, luxuriant crop of hair on the balddest head in the crowd. But let me give you this one word of warning.' Here he paused to pocket a half dollar and hand a bottle of the liquid to a baldheaded. 'My warning is—do not neglect, when the full head of hair is grown, to take the last dose in the bottle internally. That is, swallow it.' 'Swallow it! What for?' the buyer asked. 'To clench the roots,' was the reply.

Ways of the Pest.

"In one of the stores I visit out in the provinces," says Frank Rogers, one of the city's best known traveling men, "there is always to be found one of those old-fashioned pests, a hanger-on, who comes to the place in the morning, stays all day, never buying anything, driving away paying customers by his obnoxious habits and making of himself a general nuisance. 'One day when I was taking down an order from the storekeeper this old pest came up and said: 'Gee, I wish I had about two cents of that new cheese.' 'The storekeeper started to serve him. 'Oh, never mind, never mind,' said the pest. 'I guess I won't take any. I ain't got nothing less than a dime, and the chances are that if I break that it will all go before the end of the week.'—Cleveland Leader.
