QUALITY TO BE CONSIDERED

DR. MORSMAN'S TIMELY TALK ON PURITY IN DRUGS.

Better Drugs Since Enactment of Pure Food Law, But Much Depends Upon Druggist.

We expect to find gradation of quality in all things, but buyers seem often to forget that this rule applies to drugs just the same as to anything else. One would think that if quality was important anywhere it would surely be important in the drug store. It is important in the drug store; extremely important, but there are grades here just as elsewhere, and just as elsewhere, the better the grade the higher the price. I do not mean that there are quality gradations in all drugs, but in many. Some consumers and also some dealers think that since the pure food and drug law went into effect that the question of quality has been settled and that there is no longer need for vigilance, but in its workings the pure food law has only indirectly affected quality, for there can be purity without quality. Quality implies purity, but purity does not always imply quality. Cinnamon bark can be had that is pure, (i. e. not adulterated) that has but little taste. So also some specimens of Peruvian bark assay but little quinine.

Since the passage of the pure food and drug law very much better drugs have been obtainable, but there are differences yet, and the druggist must be on the alert to get the best for his customers. Now of course this change has not come about without changes in price. Quality compels greater care in growing, cultivating, gathering, curing, grinding, preparing and manufacturing, and every step means increased expense. So that besides normal advances in price there have also been advances directly attributable to the pure food and drug law, but the quality is better. The price of the good product was in the past kept down by the competition of the adulterated product, and that competition is now removed. By normal advances. I mean such advances in price as are caused by scarcity, demand, increased import duty and higher wages. Now there is one peculiarity about qualities in drugs that is not often found elsewhere, and that is that in many instances these differences in quality are legitimate. There are many articles in which we have the "chemically pure," the "commercial" or the "technical." These terms do not imply adulteration. They imply, usually, different stages of purification, or perhaps different strength. No physician or druggist would use "commercial" sulphuric acid for medicine, but for battery purposes or testing cream or many other uses it is quite as good at much less cost. This is only one example of many. It is the druggists business to know these things and to give the customer the article best suited to his purposes. The customer can not know, but he can go to the druggist who does know and depend upon him.

Sometimes quality, and likewise price, depends upon what might be called the strength of the article. These differences ought not to be, and they would soon be done away with if it were not for the class of consumers who always buy the cheapest thing they can get. Price is the first thing these people think of; quality the last. They usually get just what is coming to them. What does one gain by paying half price for sweet spirits of nitre, when he must double the dose to obtain the same effect? If it is essential at any time to get the right thing of the right quality certainly one of the times is when drugs and medicines are bought. The consumer does not know quality or uses. He must pin his faith to the honorable, and well posted drug man.

Time Brings Its Changes.
Local milliners, as well as the representatives of wholesale houses, report a most noticeable decline in demand for summer millinery. This is attributed to the custom that now prevails among many of the fair sex to go bareheaded. Where once tan and freckles were tabooed, now they are, in a measure, welcomed, for they are marks of outdoor life and athletics. It's hard on the milliner, but no doubt it has its benefits for those not afraid of sun or wind.

If your little Infelice or your little Algernon happen to be such "peculiar" offspring as to render them, as you think, immune from the regular public school course of discipline, would it not be well for you to teach them at home? The public school is not a reform school, neither is it a house of correction in a strict sense.

It is rather difficult just now to locate the "expert" who said in the early spring that he had examined the peach buds and that there would be no peaches. There are pests and pests but the pessimistic individual that bobs up each spring and blights the fruit crop with his mouth, is not the least among them.

THE BRIDES OF THE WEEK

TWO WEDDINGS OF THE CLOSING DAYS OF AUGUST.

Potet Carrothers Nuptials Tuesday Afternoon—Maddox-Reynolds Marriage Wednesday.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Potet, Tuesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock occurred the ceremony that joined the lives of Miss Leah Potet and Mr. Earl Carrothers, both of whom are well and favorably known in this city.

The marriage was solemnized by Dr. Bailey, of the Presbyterian church, and the impressive ring ceremony was used.

After the hearty congratulations of friends and relatives the happy couple left for a short pleasure trip, and thus frustrated the plans of a bevy of their friends who had planned some unique pranks for the benefit of the "newly weds."

The bride grew to womanhood in our midst, and has always been a great favorite in social circles, and enjoys the pleasure of a large circle of friends.

Mr. Carrothers resided here a few years, but is now located at Syracuse, Neb., where he holds a responsible position with a drug firm at that place.

The Tribune joins with many others in wishing the young couple an abundance of joy and a long and useful life.

Wednesday morning at 6:00 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Maddox, their second daughter, Miss Lena May, was united in marriage to Mr. Nathan O. Reynolds, of Lincoln, Rev. M. C. Brooks of the M. E. church performing the ceremony.

The bride is a graduate of the high school of this city, and the Wesleyan University, and is a popular and highly accomplished young lady.

Mr. Reynolds is a student at the Creighton Medical College of Omaha, and will finish his work at that institute in December.

Only the immediate relatives were present at the wedding which was followed by a wedding breakfast, the young couple departing by an early train for their home in Omaha.
