IN MEMORY OF SIDNEY GOODING

Our family circle has been broken. A vacant chair is by our hearth—A place that never can be filled. For one of us is gone from earth—A voice forever stilled!

Out in the silent city, the place they call the city of the dead, We laid his form to rest—rest and sleep. Sweetly sleep within its narrow bed, That little mound of clay will always be a sacred place to us.

Then well may we say, "Oh death, where is thy sting; "Oh grave, where is thy victory?" For the Lord of life and love Hath taken the sting of death away And robbed the grave of its victory.
