More Beef Needed

Conditions indicate that the nation will need more beef than we can produce and our need for feed grains for other classes of livestock is such that grain should be used economically in feeding beef cattle. Prof. Marvel Baker of the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture said this week.

For a large proportion of Nebraska producers this means carrying cattle for a somewhat longer period with the use of relatively larger quantities of roughage than usual. Palatable roughage of good quality should be used if gains are to be rapid and economical. Alfalfa hay, good quality prairie hay, silage, and the fodders may all be used.

Maximum consumption should be encouraged and in the case of coarser feeds this means that running them through a cutter or grinder may prove profitable. If available, at least 2 pounds of good quality alfalfa hay should be included in the ration. In addition, from one-half to one pound of cottonseed, soybean or linseed oil meal or cake per head daily should be fed in order to secure more rapid and economical gains. If alfalfa hay is not available, 1 pound of ground limestone for each ten to twelve cattle should be fed each day.

Clarke-McNary Trees Listed

Eighteen varieties of trees are on the Clarke-McNary list for 1942-43. As before, orders for the seedlings will be taken during the winter months and delivery will be made at planting time next spring. Cost of all varieties will be $1 per hundred, or 1 cent each.

The complete list includes American elm, Chinese elm, mulberry, cottonwood, green ash, hackberry, honey locust, black locust, Russian olive, wild plum, boxelder, caragana, soft maple, chokecherry, yellow pine, Austrian pine, jack pine and red cedar.

Extension Forester Earl G. Maxwell of the Nebraska College of Agriculture recently pointed out that seedlings often can be planted before farm work starts. Fall plowing the ground, leaving it rough saves on labor required next spring.

More Hogs for Nebraska

As more farmers and organizations boost the expanded hog production program for Nebraska, in 1943, interest among Cass County farmers indicate a desire on the part of everyone to produce pork to the limit next spring. A forty percent increase for the state as a whole has been requested to meet wartime food needs. Information just received as this is being written, indicates Secretary of Agriculture Wickard has revised upward previously 1943 hog production goals and at the same time announced a program to support hog prices at an average of $13.25 per hundred, Chicago basis until December 30th, 1944.

The Agricultural Extension Service and the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture are using their full facilities to help farmers increase production, wherever possible. All of the experimental data for many years of work, along with practical farm experiences gathered, is being made available to farmers.

The statewide hog production program was formulated several weeks back at the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture and has the full support of all groups. The first step in getting the expanded increase in hog numbers has been the countywide hog surveys conducted by county extension agents to determine how many farmers need breeding stock and how many have surplus breeding stock for sale.

Extension Livestock men at the College of Agriculture pointed out, however, that more pork in 1943 means on increased demand for protein supplements. Faster gainthrifter pigs and feed saving depends in a large measure on the use of high protein feeds to supplement the farm grown grains. They also point out that nearly every year as the farrowing season approaches, there is a scramble for breed gilts, and the probability is that this year will see the greatest demand in many years. However, it is hoped that in most counties the demand for them can be met locally.

Farm Operators Short Course

Boys and girls 16 years old or older have an opportunity to receive farm training which will help them meet the present emergency by enrolling in the short course offered at the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture. Students can enter any time during the week of November 30th to Dec. 7th and the course ends March 3. Subjects studied include all phases of livestock and hop production, farm shop work, farm records and citizenship. Persons interested should get in touch with J. V. Srb, supervisor of Short Courses, College of Agriculture at Lincoln.
