Lt. H. McDonald Has 600 Air Hours

Lt. Howard V. McDonald, Hampton, bombardier-navigator on the Marauder San Antonio Rose, has spent over 600 hours in the air, participating in 45 missions over axis-held Europe. His Marauder is flight leader of the famed Pathfinder Squadron.

In a letter to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. McDonald, Hampton, Lieutenant wrote two days after D-day, "We have been quite busy and I'm not complaining a bit. Those kids across the creek don't have it too easy and all the help I can give them is just that much more they won't have to worry about."

"We are still able to sleep in a bed for a few hours and that would probably be a luxury to them."

"I can't write about what we have been doing but you undoubtedly have heard more news than we hear. The radios are probably blaring all day long over there about the progress. We get most of our news from the papers and from the briefings we go to."

Following a mission over Europe, Lieutenant McDonald, in an interview with the Associated Press, said his flak suit saved his life by stopping a piece of anti-aircraft shell which struck his shoulder. His plane was a member of the force which struck at the freight yards at Ghent, Belgium, when six enemy fighters were shot down.

Lieutenant McDonald was at one time stationed at Natal, a Brazilian air field, the gateway to Africa, Sicily, the near and middle east, Persia, Russia and India.

It was here that Life Photographer Thomas D. McAvoy took the pictures published in a September issue of the magazine. Lieutenant McDonald was shown in three of them.

Lieutenant McDonald attended Hampton high, Wesleyan university and the University of Nebraska and joined the army as a private in 1941.

He was first placed in the weather forecasting department at Chanute Field and in 1942 was transferred to Kelly Field where he began his bombardier training. He was graduated at Roswell, N. M., in October, 1942, and left for overseas April 22, 1943, being promoted to the rank of first lieutenant Aug. 19.
