President Truman Honored in Hometown of Independence

Japan Prepares Suicide Weapons To Stop Invasion

KANSAS CITY, MO., (UP)—Harry S. Truman who dusted bottles in a country drug store for $3 a week when he was 11-years-old will be honored here Thursday as President of the United States in ceremonies occupying most of the day.

Mr. Truman's nearby hometown of Independence had its day yesterday. Today it was the turn of Kansas City and by nightfall the President will have visited his alma mater, the University of Kansas City, received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree and stood as the honor guest at a public reception in the municipal auditorium.

Even while going through the elaborate stages of his first homecoming as President, Mr. Truman devoted considerable time to White House business. He planned to arrive at his old office in the Federal building here early Thursday. He used the office when he was a Missouri member of the senate.

The President goes back to Washington Sunday, sends the United Nations charter to the senate on Monday and probably will nominate his old friend, James F. Byrnes as the new Secretary of State on Tuesday. He announced the resignation of E. R. Stettinius, Jr., as secretary of state in Independence Wednesday, and also the appointment of Stettinius as the American representative to the United Nations organization when it is formed.

After working in his office during the early forenoon Thursday, Mr. Truman planned to visit the University of Kansas City where he studied law from 1923 to 1925 for the celebration of the law school's 50th anniversary. He planned to join the alumni and students in a picnic lunch on the campus.

Tonight at the Kansas City municipal auditorium the President will receive an honorary LL.D. from the University during a homecoming and convocation sponsored jointly by the school and the merchants association. He will speak at this ceremony, then attend a public reception in the little theater quarter of the auditorium.

This will be the first honorary degree Mr. Truman has accepted since becoming President.

The people in his block of north Delaware street in Independence were happy, too, as they surveyed the new "Summer White House." They were a little awed by the military guards and secret service agents who walked back and forth over their lawns, keeping strangers away.

There are few strangers to Mr. Truman in this part of the country, particularly Jackson county where he cut his political teeth. When he appeared in public, hardly a minute passed that he did not exchange personal greetings with some old friend.

CARNIVAL SIDELIGHTS

Clerks grabbing every possible opportunity to look out the store windows, on some pretense or other.

Seen coming down the street this morning—pessimist John Bissinger, wearing a raincoat. This makes fair weather quite probable.

Mystery of the carnival—what Milo Price has in that brief case he's never been seen without.

Several of the princesses making use of every last minute to collect votes for the coveted bond queen title.

Store windows were washed, and sidewalks were swept this morning to guard against any condemning remarks by the afternoon and evening crowds.

Soldiers arriving by the truckload for their part in the day's activities.

Chairman Walter Smith attending to last minute details and acting as general supervisor. From time to time he spoke a few words over the public address system, testing it out to be sure that all is in readiness for the afternoon program.
