Stresses Need of Fat Salvage Now

Continuing importance of used household Fat Salvage for peace-time production is stressed by Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson in a telegram yesterday to Donald M. Pfeiffer, President of the National Renderers Association. "We urge that you ask all your members to continue their splendid work on the salvage of used fats. Renderers and independent collectors have a key role in the Salvage Program. It is essential that they continue to complete the collection system. The end of consumer rationing of food fats and oils has in no way lessened the need for salvage fats for industrial use. Your continued cooperation is needed and will be appreciated." Reports received by the American Fat Salvage Committee indicate that there has been only a slight decline in used kitchen fats turned in to meat dealers since the cessation of meat rationing.

Shortages of soap and other essential household articles which depend upon industrial fats and oils seem to have convinced housewives that fat salvage is still a number one duty. Efficient collection of used fats by meat dealers and pickup service by Renderers and Railway Express Agency are vital to the continuing success of the program Fat Salvage Committee officials agree. Meat dealers are most active and cooperative and will continue to pay four cents a pound for salvaged household fats as long as the present industrial fats and oils shortages continue.
